U.S. Steel lays off 13,000

PITTSBURGH (Reuter) — United States Steel Corp. says it plans to close operations at more than a dozen sites, causing about 13,000 people to lose their jobs.

U.S. Steel, the largest steel maker in the United States, said on Tuesday that operations in eight states would be affected. It indicated that the cost would exceed the $268 million profit built up in the first 9 months of 1979.

The closures, affecting a wide variety of steel products, were blamed on rising costs, competition from imports and environmental regulations.

A U.S. Steel spokesman said the decision, made by the board of directors of the company, was the most wide-ranging in the modern history of the firm, which was founded in the 19th century.

Thousands of workers have been laid off in the industry, which began to feel the effects of an economic slowdown in the third quarter. Especially damaging have been slumps in the auto and appliance industries.

A U.S. Steel spokesman said no timetable for the closings had been set, but the company statement said that some of the facilities would operate into 1980 to fulfil commitments to customers.

The 13,000 employees who will lose their jobs — managers and administrators as well as hourly workers — represent around 6.5 per cent of the work force of the company.

The company said it would work with the communities where operations have been stopped to try to convert the closed facilities into "new, job-creating, revenue-producing activities."

The cutback will be hardest on Youngstown, Ohio which was devastated two years ago when Youngstown Sheet Tube closed its plant here and 4,000 workers were suddenly on the street.

Besides the steel operations in Youngstown, U.S. Steel said it will shut plants in Waukegan, Ill.; New Haven, Conn.; Torrance, Calif.; Fairfield, Ala.; Pittsburg, Calif.; Ambridge, Pa.; Pittsburgh; Universal, Pa.; Buffington, Ind.; Northampton, Pa.; Chicago; Camden, N.J.; McKees Rocks, Pa.; Joliet, Ill.; and Fairfield, Ala.

Tax treats total 8.9%

OTTAWA (CP) — Personal exemptions, tax brackets and the refundable child tax credit will go up by 8.9 per cent for the 1980 tax year.

Finance Minister John Crosbie tabled the tax indexation details in the Commons Tuesday, saying that while the information was to have been in his Dec. 11 budget, he had decided to do it earlier to give employers time to make the necessary adjustments to the 1980 payroll deduction schedules.

The 8.9-per-cent increase will benefit federal taxpayers by $1.425 billion in 1980, with the basic personal exemption going up by $240 to reach $2,890 and the married exemption increasing by $210 to $2,530.

The exemption for dependants under age 18 goes to $540 from $500, the exemption for those age 18 or more, to $990 from $910 and the age exemption, to $1,810 from $1,660 as does the deduction for the blind and disabled.

The child tax credit for the 1980 taxation year, which will be claimed in 1981, will rise to $238 from $218 for each child.

Crosbie's pre-budget goodies were disclosed along with hints that his Dec. 11 budget will try to stimulate the economy by encouraging expansion of Canadian industries, especially those that manufacture internationally-traded goods.

The coming budget will have few, if any, tax cuts, Crosbie said, adding that its policies will not be popular.

"It will begin a process that involves several years of stringent fiscal and monetary discipline.

The main stumbling block facing the Tory budget has been the dispute with Alberta over a new energy pricing policy.

Tuesday, however, Prime Minister Clark emerged from nearly eight hours of private talks with Alberta Premier Peter Lougheed saying he was confident a new oil pricing agreement with the provinces is at hand.

Baby bonus boost slated

OTTAWA (CP) — Monthly family allowance payments will rise in January to $21.80 from $20 per child in most provinces and territories, the health and welfare department announced today.

Family allowance payments vary in Quebec and Alberta according to the age or number of children in a family, providing the payments average $21.80 for each child in the provinces.

Special allowances for foster parents, welfare agencies, government departments and institutions caring for children will increase to $30.51 from $27.99.

Shah leaves for Mexico within 10 days — aide

Times News Services

The shah is expected to return to his Cuernavaca, Mexico, retreat within 10 days, a member of his public relations office said today.

"It all depends on when his medical treatment ends but we believe he will be here in eight to ten days," the spokesman said in Mexico.

But in New York, Iran filed a civil lawsuit today against the shah and his wife, seeking $20 billion it claims he diverted through a New York-based foundation.

The suit, filed in state Supreme Court, also seeks compensatory damages of $61 billion.

"The shah misappropriated, embezzled or otherwise diverted to his own use, assets and funds having an approximate value of $20 billion," the suit charges.

It says the conduit of diversion was the Pahlavi Foundation, which was formed in Iran in 1958, "ostensibly as a non-profit, charitable organization."

(President Carter will hold a nationally televised news conference at 6 p.m. PDT tonight to report on the Iranian situation.)

Meanwhile, in the United Nations, the UN Security Council has delayed the start of its debate on the U.S.-Iranian crisis until Saturday night, waiting for the arrival from Tehran of Iran's acting foreign minister, Abolhassan Bani Sadr. (Just before noon word was received that Ayatollah Khomeini today replaced Bani Sadr, a moderate, with Revolutionary Council member Sadegh Ghotbzadeh.)

An Iranian spokesman in Tehran said today that Bani Sadr or his successor "probably" will not attend the council session. Ayatollah Khomeini, who has rejected in advance any council decision, summoned Bani Sadr and other members of the Revolutionary Council to consider strategy.

The 15-member council launched its public consideration of the crisis with a 16-minute session Tuesday afternoon at which it heard speeches by Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim and Council President Sergio Palacios de Vizzio of Bolivia. It then adjourned until 9 p.m. EST Saturday.

Waldheim called on the United States and Iran "to avoid any action which could inflame" the situation further. Palacios de Vizzio urged Iran to release the 49 Americans held hostage in the U.S. embassy in Tehran, renewing an appeal he made on behalf of the council on Nov. 9.

Iran's UN Mission had said Bani Sadr would be in New York for the start of the debate Saturday night.

S. Pole air crash kills 257

A U.S. rescue helicopter crew reported it saw no signs of survivors today in the wreckage of an Air New Zealand DC-10 that crashed in the frozen Antarctic with 257 people aboard, including one Canadian and 12 Americans.

New Zealand's Search and Rescue Headquarters said the helicopter carrying the rescue team was unable to land because of strong wind currents over the crash site.

A Canadian passenger aboard the the downed jetliner was identified as Eija Parkkari, 25, of Toronto. Miss Parkkari's mother, Kyllikki Parkkari, of Thunder Bay, Ont., said her daughter was on a working trip with a travel agency.

The search plane from the U.S. Antarctic base at McMurdo sighted the wreckage on the icy slopes of Mount Erebus, a 3,500-metre mountain near the plane's last reported position.

Officials said the crash was New Zealand's worst air accident ever and by far the country's worst disaster

Charges eyed over slides

Times News Services

Federal Fisheries Minister Jim McGrath said Tuesday he is seeking legal advice on whether to lay charges against a British Columbia timber company for mudslides that have damaged a major salmon spawning stream on the Queen Charlotte Islands.

Last March, federal fisheries officials arrested 16 loggers for cutting in the area, thereby endangering a fish habitat which is protected under the Fisheries Act. The charges were dropped after a federal-provincial squabble over jurisdiction.

McGrath said that after touring the area last September he wanted to go ahead with charges against the company then, but lawyers said it would be hard to make a case.

He said he has asked the lawyers to have another look at the case in light of the damage to the stream.

Jim Fulton, the New Democratic MP whose Skeena riding includes the Queen Charlotte Islands, said in an interview that he wants McGrath to enforce the Fisheries Act.

"It's not just a question of fish versus the trees. It boils down to a constitutional question that involves the long-term resource management."

He said residents of the area say the rainfall which provincial officials are blaming for the slides is common in the area. The company's logging practices were the real cause.

Former fisheries minister Romeo LeBlanc, who agreed to drop the charges against the loggers after the B.C. government said the stream would be protected, said the provincial government "has betrayed us."

The incident is especially aggravating to federal officials who are spending $25 million a year in B.C. trying to improve streams and rivers as part of a salmon enhancement program.

Meanwhile, the provincial environment ministry has sent two people to the Rennell Sound area of the Queen Charlotte Islands to check reports that further slides threaten the stream, Environment Minister Steve Rogers said.

City's crime rate dropping

The number of serious crimes reported in Victoria has dropped eight per cent this year, city police said today.

Chief Jack Gregory presented statistics for January through October which show a total of 8,959 criminal code offences up to Halloween, compared with 9,777 to Oct. 31 last year.

Most categories of crime show a decline. Theft under $200 accounted for 3,292 incidents so far this year, compared with 3,467 in the same 10 month period last year.

Breaking and entering statistics were 1,590 this year versus 1,737 last year while assaults totalled 473 in 1979 and 532 in 1978.

Food price continues to climb

OTTAWA (CP) — Higher prices for fish, beverages and fresh vegetables helped push food prices up slightly between October and November, the agriculture department said today.

The department's monthly food-at-home index rose by 0.47 per cent and stands 13.1 per cent higher than in November, 1978. The cost of a nutritious diet for a family of four for a week stands at $61.44, up 34 cents from October.

Fish prices rose 3.6 per cent during November "reflecting strong demand and higher costs of fishing, processing and distribution."

Higher prices for coffee and soft drinks pushed up the beverage index by 1.5 per cent in a month. Fresh vegetable prices rose by 5.5 per cent because of higher price for imported tomatoes and cabbages. Prices for imported fresh produce are expected to rise sharply in the next few months.

But prices for beef, pork and fresh and processed fruit were lower than in October.

Milk prices rose in several centres and higher energy and labor costs pushed up prices for cereal and bakery products by one per cent. Prices are expected to remain high until next summer.

Province refuses to buy Emily Carr collection

Provincial Secretary Evan Wolfe today turned thumbs down on a request by Victoria Ald. Robin Blencoe that the provincial government spend $1.3 million in lottery funds to bring a large collection of Emily Carr paintings to Victoria.

The 27 paintings in the Fannin Hall Collection represent the biggest single sale of Carr's art in recent years.

An anonymous Vancouver industrialist is selling the collection, believed the largest privately-owned group of Carr's paintings.

In a letter to Wolfe, Blencoe said he believes lottery funds are the best source of money to buy the collection because the money is specifically earmarked for cultural, artistic and athletic projects.

But Wolfe said while the government might consider buying some individial works from the collection, it has no intention of purchasing the entire 27 paintings.

"If there there are individual pieces of art available, these could be considered by whatever provincial agency finds it appropriate," the minister said.

"As far as the lottery fund making a major contribution, I don't think that would be appropriate."

In his letter to the minister, Blencoe said Emily Carr is a painter of great historical importance to B.C. and Victoria.

"It is quite fitting and appropriate that this superb collection be repatriated to the city where Emily was born."

Blencoe said the chance to purchase the collection represents a "once-in-a-lifetime" opportunity to acquire a fine collection of Carr's works.

Blencoe's proposal was hailed by Roger Boulet, director of the Art Gallery of Greater Victoria.

"Fantastic," he said. "That's what lottery funds are for."

Boulet said there are some of Carr's later paintings in the collection he would like to acquire but said there is no chance of this happening due to a lack of funds.

The Victoria gallery has eight Carrs in its permanent collection, some of the calibre of the Fannin Hall paintings, Boulet said.

Karen Keenlyside, the former curator of the collection who is handling the sale, said the paintings cover the breadth of the late artist's work and include five unique early paintings from 1910-11 when Carr worked in France.

The present owner cannot be identified because of concern for the security of the collection, she said.

By chance the collection's arrival on the market coincides with recent publication of a book on Carr's art by local author Doris Shadbolt.

Keenlyside said it was Shadbolt's book that moved her to try to keep the collection intact by selling all 27 paintings to one collector or corporation.

Shadbolt said the Fannin Hall Collection is part of B.C.'s heritage and should remain in the province.

Lorna Farrell-Ward, a curator at the Vancouver Art Gallery, said there is virtually no chance the gallery will be able to purchase the collection because of its "pitifully small" budget.

"We would love someone to purchase them and donate them to us," said Farrell-Ward. "That would not only keep them here but add to our collection and fill in some areas."

The Vancouver gallery's 173 paintings form the largest single collection of Carr's work, but it has no paintings from her French period. The National Art Gallery in Ottawa has one of those paintings.

Because of their importance as Canadian art, the Carr paintings fall under export controls that prevent them from being sold outside the country.

A spokesman at the National Gallery said it cannot afford the full collection either.

Buy hospital, gov't urged

About 20 employees of the King George private hospital in Surrey demonstrated on the steps of the Legislature today.

The hospital is closing because of insufficient government funding and the workers want the provincial government to take it over.

Employee spokesman Gay Burdison said the government purchased a private hospital in Oak Bay when it ran into problems and she sees no reason why the same can't be done with King George Hospital.

"When the government went into the long-term care program to provide care for the elderly of B.C., they made a commitment to the people of B.C.," she said. "They contracted out 77 beds to the King George Hospital.

"Now, because the doctors feel they are not making enough profit to stay in business, they are going to bulldoze the building and build a high-rise office complex," she said.

Burdison said if the hospital closes, it will only add to the critical shortage of hospital beds in Surrey. "The government has no alternative but to step in," she said.

Iran quake kills 11

TEHRAN (Reuter) — An earthquake that struck northeast Iran late Tuesday killed 11 people and destroyed three villages, the official radio said today.

THE OUTCASTS by Ben Wicks

since an earthquake in 1931 claimed 255 lives.

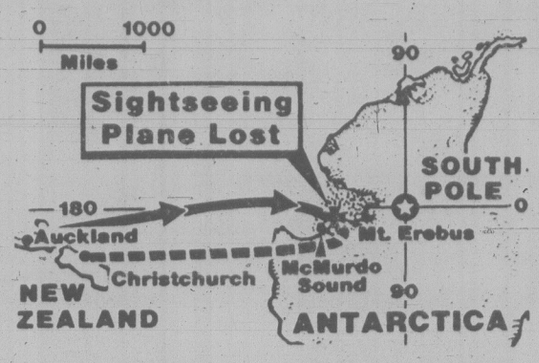

The airline said the 257 passengers aboard the DC-10 included 46 foreigners, one Canadian, 12 Americans, 24 Japanese, seven Australians and two Britons. The rest were New Zealanders.

The passengers had paid $359 for what was supposed to be an 11-hour flight from Auckland to the Antarctic coast and back.

Air New Zealand said it understood the jetliner had completed its sightseeing run and was on its way back north to New Zealand when radio contact was lost at 2 p.m. today New Zealand time (5 p.m. PST Tuesday). It was then still over Antarctica, between 50 and 65 kilometres from McMurdo.

The loss of radio contact was blamed on sunspot activity and did not cause immediate concern. But at 8 p.m. the airline announced the plane was an hour overdue for a refuelling stop at Christchurch, on New Zealand's South Island.

Two hours later the airline announced that the plane was lost. It said its fuel would have been used up 30 minutes earlier.

The U.S. base at McMurdo Sound took charge of the search for the missing plane, and sent up five aircraft — two C-130 Hercules, a C-141 Starlifter and two helicopters. An Orion from the New Zealand Air Force was searching the ocean south of New Zealand.

Air New Zealand said it had never lost a passenger before.

The airline operates the Antarctic sightseeing flights during the Southerh Hemisphere's summer, and this was the fourth this season. The planes fly from New Zealand to McMurdo Sound, cruise at low level over that area, fly at relatively low level for 45 minutes north along the Victoria Land coast and then head out across the water for the return to New Zealand.

An official said the flights had been operating for three summers without any previous mishap.

Among the crew was a widely-known New Zealand mountaineer, Peter Mulgrew, who gave the passengers a commentary on the Antarctic sights. He was an associate of Sir Edmund Hillary, one of the first two men to climb to the top of Mount Everest.

The airliner lost today is the third DC-10 to crash this year.

A Western Airlines DC-10 landed on the wrong runway at Mexico City airport last month and plowed into a maintenance building, killing 56 passengers and crew members.

An American Airlines DC-10 crashed in Chicago last May killing 273 passengers and crew in the worst U.S. air disaster in history.

The Chicago disaster called into question the safety of the giant jets, which carry more than 100,000 passengers daily throughout the world.

The American Airlines DC-10 crashed on takeoff at Chicago's O'Hare airport when one of its three engines fell off. Small cracks in the pylons joining the engines to the wings were discovered in several DC-10s after aviation officials ordered a thorough check of DC-10s flown by U.S. airlines.

Bus strike next?

VANCOUVER (CP) — Striking B.C. Hydro office workers shut down the Seabus commuter service for the third consecutive day today and warned that Hydro's bus system might be the next target if no progress towards a new contract is made within the next week.

Fred Trotter, president of the Office and Technical Employees Union, local 378, said the public will be forewarned if the union decides to hit the buses.

"We could have a major impact on (bus) operations," he said. "We have considerable clout. It just depends on how we use it."

He said the union will continue its strategy of dispatching pickets to selected Hydro locations without previous notice.

Knife-wielder after Kennedy

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A woman with a knife entered Sen. Edward Kennedy's Senate office today and scuffled with Secret Service agents guarding the presidential candidate, a spokesman said.

One agent was cut on the hand, but there were no series injuries.

The senator was in his inner office at the time of the incident.

The woman, identified as Susan Osgood, 38, was arrested by Capitol Police. Her hometown was not immediately known.

Melody Miller, a Kennedy campaign spokesman, said the unidentified woman walked into Kennedy's Senate office and asked to see Kennedy, who is to leave on an extended campaign trip later today.

"It doesn't sound that bad. There was a woman who came into the Senate office and was a little bit rowdy. The Secret Service asked her to leave and one of the Secret Service agents was cut or scratched. It was not a big stab wound," she said.

"She didn't get anywhere near the senator," she said.

"We have no idea what she wanted to see the senator about."

PC waffling causes Petro-Can chaos

OTTAWA (CP) — Petro-Canada Chairman W.H. Hopper said Tuesday the state-owned oil company has lost senior staff and been forced to put off participation in some new energy projects because of uncertainty over the Conservative government's plans to sell it.

Hopper told the Commons natural resources committee the turnover rate in the company rose by about 50 per cent in the March-October period because of concern the Progressive Conservative government might break up the company and turn it over to the private sector.

Most were senior staff members who were replaced by younger, less-experienced employees.

"It's been a problem for us . . . the basic uncertainty of where the future of Petro-Canada lies," Hopper told the committee.

Hopper told NDP energy critic Cyril Symes that Petro-Canada was not able to participate in development of a heavy oil project at Cold Lake, Alta., despite being invited more than a year ago by Imperial Oil Ltd.

He said Petro-Canada does not now have the money to get involved and won't be able to get on with budget planning until "our current situation is cleared up."

Hopper declined to state an opinion over whether the company ought to be turned back to the private sector — as the Clark government says it will do — or should be retained and expanded as a Crown corporation, as the Liberals and NDP favor.

Boater sues ferry

The B.C. Ferry Corp. is being sued by a Sidney couple who claim the ferry Queen of Sidney damaged their boat in Active Pass on Aug. 6.

Brien and Wilma Baker, 8549 Lochside, started a B.C. Supreme Court action Tuesday claiming the vessel overtook and ran down their pleasure boat Panadera.

They are also suing ferry captain Michael Carter, who they say was in charge of the vessel when the incident occurred.

The accident is said to have happened during heavy fog in the narrow passage. Active Pass has been the site of other confrontations between pleasure boat owners and vessels operated by the corporation.

It was also the site of the grounding of the Queen of Alberni last summer.

Accidental gassing

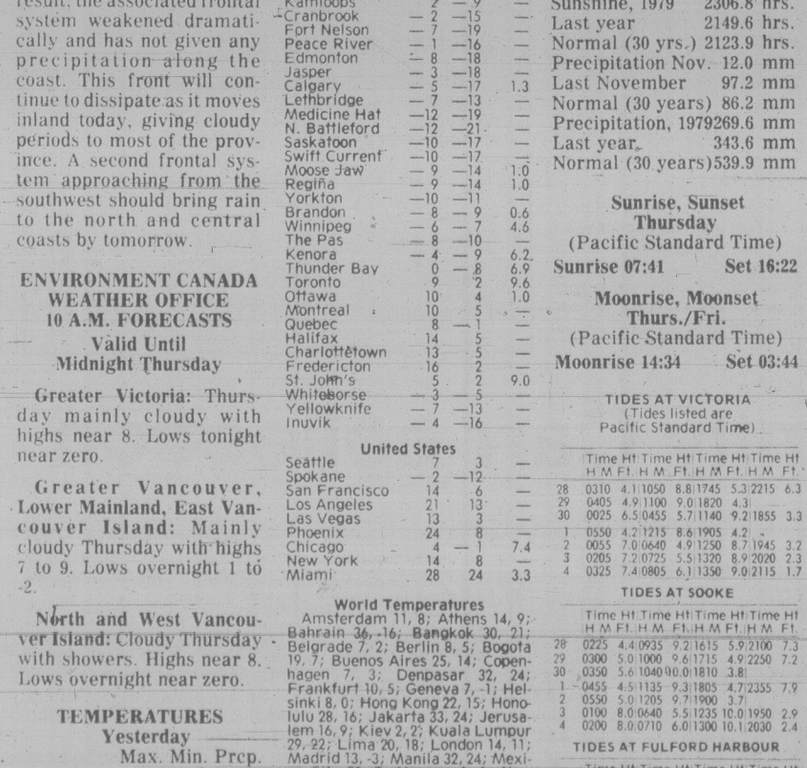

ARMSTRONG, B.C. (CP) — About 250 students and staff at the Pleasant Valley Senior Secondary school here were evacuated Tuesday afternoon when a faulty valve on a chlorine gas cylinder malfunctioned during a chemistry experiment releasing the gas into the classroom.

Thirty students and staff were checked at Armstrong hospital, but only teacher Bill Horner and student Sarah Enoch were kept overnight for observation.

A deep low pressure centre off the coast moved northwest overnight and further from the B.C. coast. As a result, the associated frontal system weakened dramatically and has not given any precipitation along the coast. This front will continue to dissipate as it moves inland today, giving cloudy periods to most of the province. A second frontal system approaching from the southwest should bring rain to the north and central coasts by tomorrow.

Pollution rules relaxed at mill

KITIMAT (CP) — The provincial pollution control branch agreed Tuesday to relax anti-pollution rules and allow Eurocan Pulp and Paper Co. to operate without a key pollution control device.

The mill shut down Nov.11 following a $10-million-fire which damaged the precipitator, a device used to remove chemical exhaust from the steam room.

Eurocan spokesman Stan Fritter said without the device, 40 tons of pollutant will enter the atmosphere every day instead of the usual 1.5 to two tons.

He said it will take four months for precipitator parts to be shipped from Kitchener, Ont. and rebuilt at the plant.

Education tax switch advocated

VANCOUVER (CP) — The B.C. Teachers' Federation has urged newly-appointed Education Minister Brian Smith to reduce the portion of residential property taxes which pay for education.

Federation president Al Blakey said Tuesday the reduction is justified because, there will be enough money from increased provincial revenue and the 1979 provincial budget surplus to cover 1980 school costs.

No way to legislate

GOLDEN (CP) — A coroner's jury has concluded it is impossible to draw up government regulations that will eliminate the danger of mountain climbing.

The verdict came after two days of testimony about the death of Danny Minion, 15, of Calgary, who was killed in a fall Sept. 1 from a sheer rock face.

Juvenile remanded

WILLIAMS LAKE (CP) — A 16-year-old girl charged with second-degree murder was remanded Monday to a juvenile centre at Hedley, to await her next court appearance Jan. 17.

The girl was charged after the body of Sandra Johnny, 16, was found in bush Nov. 18 near Alexis Creek.

Missing silver recovered

TRAIL (CP) — RCMP have recovered $50,000 worth of silver missing from the Cominco Ltd. smelter after interrupting a bid to sell four silver bars to a refinery near Vancouver.

Four men were charged Monday with theft and possession of stolen goods.

Police said the silver disappeared from a storage room at the giant plant here two months ago despite rigid security.

The silver was recovered after Richmond RCMP were told that an attempt was being made to sell four large ingots of silver to the Delta precious metals refinery in Richmond. Exact weight of the metal was not disclosed.

Track cleared for strike

VANCOUVER (CP) — Provincial mediator Vince Reddy booked out of the contract dispute between B.C. Railway and the Joint Council of Trade Unions Tuesday, clearing the way for a strike by the 1,800 workers.

Disabled continue their WCB protest

VANCOUVER (CP) — A group of disabled workers, fed up with attempts to get disability claims accepted and fairer pensions, say they will continue their vigil in front of the Workers' Compensation Board until they get results.

The parade of walking wounded have been picketing the office since Thursday to back their demands. The board says it is willing to discuss the issues, but the pickets are too angry to back down now.

"Until we get satisfaction or the courts drag us out, we'll be here rain or shine," says Merril Turpin, spokesman for the United Injured and Disabled Workers Association, which claims a membership of more than 200.

The association is calling for the discontinuation of unfair medical judgments by board doctors and for fairer treatment of disabled workers.

The two sides have met once, but Turpin termed the meeting nothing more than a "big buck-passing job."

Association co-founder Len Reid said membership in the organization is open to anyone "as long as he's a WCB-shafted worker. There's plenty of them in this province."

"When you go before the board you're made to feel as though you're guilty of an offence somehow. You're made to feel that you have to protect yourself. We have to get more humanity shown from that board."

Reid and Turpin cited the example of a dietitian who injured both knees while earning $900 a month at Vancouver General Hospital. She was sent back to work after an unsuccessful operation and now walks with canes and is unable to work because of the pain. She receives a $69-a-month pension from the board, they said.

If claimants are turned down, they can appeal to a board of review, but the association complains that claimants are not provided with the information in their file, only a summary of it, resulting in a type of "kangaroo court."

And all too often, they charge, board commissioners overturn favorable decisions of the board of review.

"The commissioners have too much power," Reid said. "They're like little Gods up there."

The association says the trauma of being injured, unable to provide an adequate living for one's family and being given the runaround by the board results in neurosis, low self-esteem and family breakups.

"Workers who have the misfortune of suffering work-related accidents are finding that the initial physical suffering is minimal compared with the financial and psychological effects left after many months of frustrations in their attempts to either have their claim accepted or to obtain a fair pension," the association said in a letter to B.C.'s ombudsman, Karl Friedmann.

In a three-page brief to former Labor Minister Allan Williams, the association accused the board of cost-cutting and charged that adjudicaters overrule medical advice.

McGeer aide sues Sun

The executive assistant to Universities, Science and Communications Minister Dr. Pat McGeer has filed a libel suit against The Vancouver Sun and its Victoria columnist Marjorie Nichols.

In a B.C. Supreme Court writ, Glen Mitchell claims damages for libels allegedly contained in articles printed Oct. 17 and 18.

Farmers irked by Hewitt appointment

VERNON (CP) — By reappointing Jim Hewitt as agriculture minister, Premier Bill Bennett has again failed to grasp the importance of B.C.'s fourth largest industry, farm leaders said Tuesday.

Three former leaders of the 11,000-member B.C. Federation of Agriculture, along with many delegates to the federation's annual convention, said Hewitt's reappointment in Friday's cabinet shuffle means the agriculture industry will continue to be treated with little interest by the Social Credit government.

None of the former presidents, Robert Reynolds, Charles Bernhardt and Ralph Barichello, said they supported the New Democratic Party, but all felt the former NDP government was the only one in the past 25 years that has done anything for their industry.

"With the NDP we at least had a minister (Dave Stupich) who had a high profile within the cabinet," Reynolds said.

Hewitt carries no political weight in cabinet, he said.

The Social Credit government still feels it can flood and blacktop valley bottoms and get food supplies from Alberta and the U.S., he said.

"The truth is that we have to have a stable and secure food supply within this province in order to secure proper economic development."

The federation also complained that environmental concerns are placing unnecessary hardships on farmers.

Delegates said they were sick and tired of regulations that ban the use of certain chemicals, when many of the same chemicals are used on fruit and vegetables imported into B.C.

They called on the federal government to delay for one year a ban on Fenoprop, also known as 2-4-5 TP, used to stop premature fruit dropping. The ban is scheduled to begin next year.

Livestock producers said it was not fair that environmentalists could continue to prevent the poisoning of wolves, coyotes and bears.

"If B.C. is to continue to have a livestock industry in some areas predators have to be controlled," said Don Knoerr, federation vice-president.

The federation asked B.C. residents to set stable rules to assist the agriculture industry.

Federation president Pat Hibbert said farmers must be able to purchase sufficient land at fair prices and have income levels equal to other sectors of society so that they can convince their children to enter the industry.

No need to alter prostitution laws?

OTTAWA (CP) — Justice Minister Jacques Flynn said Tuesday he thinks the existing law against prostitution is adequate, but he will ask Conservative MPs this week whether they agree with police chiefs that it should be tightened.

Flynn, who met Don Winterton, Vancouver police chief and president of the Canadian Association of Police Chiefs last Friday, repeated this opinion that the Criminal Code should not be used to solve purely local or temporary problems.

He said Winterton told him the main problems were prostitutes clogging the sidewalks and harassing pedestrians.

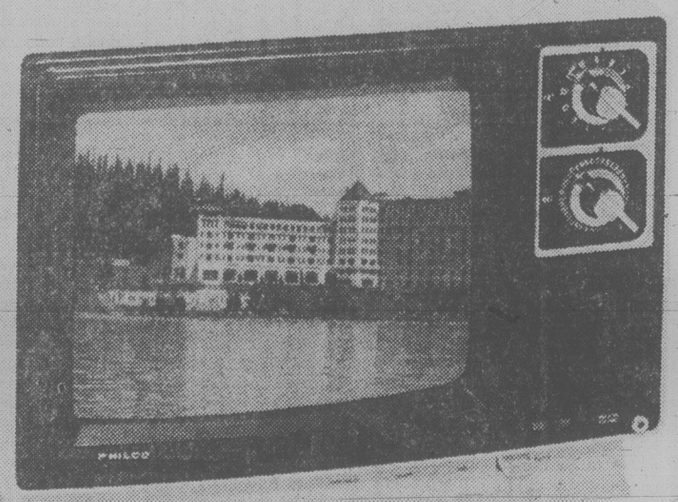

"I say this is the same thing as cars parking on the sidewalk and things like that," Flynn said. It was a nuisance rather than a crime.

In Victoria, Human Resources Minister Grace McCarthy said the provincial government would support any efforts to help clean up prostitution in Vancouver.

Mrs. McCarthy said her ministry has had some success with programs dealing with prostitution.

Nobody can gloat

It's a classic case of I-told-you-so, but nobody is gloating, least of all Wally Johnson, the director-general of the federal fisheries department for the west coast.

Nearly six months have passed since Johnson agreed to drop charges laid against Q.C. Timber Ltd. and some of its employees by fisheries officiers on the Queen Charlotte Islands. Johnson also agreed to the resumption of cutting by Q.C. Timber at Riley Creek, despite warnings from his own field staff that landslides would result, thereby jeopardizing rich salmon spawning grounds.

The fisheries officer who precipitated what became an unruly jurisdictional battle between Victoria and Ottawa resigned over the affair. Jim Hart believed that slides were inevitable and that Johnson had capitulated to the Forest Service.

Last week the west coast of the Charlottes was battered with a North Pacific storm. Six inches of rain fell in 48 hours. But that wasn't all that came down. Eight landslides tumbled from the mountainsides adjacent to Riley Creek. Three were considered substantial, and one travelled nearly 1,000 feet, cutting a swath 200 feet wide and five feet deep. It came to rest in Riley Creek. According to the fisheries supervisor on the Charlottes, Kip Slater, silt from the slide will likely affect salmon spawning grounds for the three-mile length of the creek.

Fisheries lawyers are now assessing the evidence to determine if charges will be laid. But the possibility seems remote, since Johnson allowed the logging to resume in the first place.

It should be noted that Q.C. Timber did comply with orders to take anti-erosion measures. Cross ditching was done, grass was planted and a tree barricade was left along the creek. It was all washed away.

But while Skeen MP Jim Fulton and conservation groups pressure for action, the ministers concerned, both federal and provincial, must correct an obvious failing in their management of resources.

Fishing and forestry are the backbone of the B.C. economy. The provincial forest service cannot continue with its high and mighty attitude toward the other resource.

Co-operation between the forest service and fisheries department has never been more essential. As logging companies are forced to move into steeper slopes to reach marketable timber, both on the Queen Charlottes and in other regions of the coast, hundreds of salmon streams become threatened.

Although Slater says "it is easy to say I told you only worse", he also notes that some good may result if the forest service pays more attention to the possibility of slides in crucial areas.

When Hart resigned he not only predicted last week's slides but also said there was no end in sight to the fight between fisheries and forestry over logging practices. Maybe he'll be wrong on that count.

Time to help

The day after Hallowe'en the Christmas decorations go up in department stores. November and December are the times for most of us to spend, spend, spend . . . spend on food, spend on entertainment, spend on gifts.

All this spending is often deplored, yet it has its own economic advantages for Canada. Many small businesses, such as toy shops, survive the year because of the Christmas trade. The spending can mean a reduction in unemployment, an increase in Canada's productivity.

All the same, let us also give a little thought at Christmas for the billions of people around the world for whom our concepts of spending can have no meaning. They have no money, and, for many, there is nothing to buy if they had.

For them, the most basic needs are paramount — food, clothing and shelter. Many international organizations are working to meet those needs. One has become almost synonymous with the Canadian Christmas.

That is the Unitarian Services Committee, which opens its 1979 Christmas appeal with a meeting tonight at the Empress Hotel. At that meeting, Dr. Lotta Hitschmanova, the legendary head of the USC, is to tell of the tremendous needs she has seen as she travelled around the world this year. The USC is hoping to collect $3.6 million from Canadians before Christmas Day.

If Christmas is the time for spending, surely the spirit of Christmas should involve at least a little spending on those who need it so much more than we.

JAMES RESTON

A bleak mood in Moscow

MOSCOW — The mood of officials in Moscow these days seems almost as bleak as the weather. Winter is coming, and the Central Committee of the Soviet Communist Party will be meeting in a few days over a tangle of problems for the 80s.

They are preoccupied, as always, with their domestic political concerns, and also with real and imagined nightmares of security on their eastern and western flanks.

First, the talks here with a Chinese delegation about the normalization of Sino-Soviet relations have not gone well. And second, they are alarmed by the prospect of 600 new U.S. medium-range nuclear missiles being deployed in Western Europe. The first outcome had been expected; the second is regarded here as a crisis, threatening the whole process of strategic arms control.

Pre-conditions

In the talks on China, Russia made two proposals: first, that each side undertake not to attack the other militarily with nuclear, conventional or any other weapons; second, that neither should adopt a policy of hegemony in Asia or anywhere else in the world. Moscow proposed to sign a statement of principles similar to the U.S.-Soviet peace agreement of 1972 and the Soviet-French agreement of 1971.

It is known that China refused even to discuss these principles until the Soviet government met certain specific preconditions. These included a Chinese demand that Moscow withdraw its troops from Mongolia and end all Soviet military aid to Vietnam. Moscow rejected these and all other preconditions, so the tension on the Soviet eastern frontier continues.

On the Soviet western front, officials here regard the forward deployment of U.S. missiles as a violation of the Carter-Brezhnev agreement not to change the East-West balance of forces, and they insist that these weapons would greatly increase the element of military accident.

They know, of course, that the U.S. has intercontinental nuclear missiles targeted on key areas of the Soviet Union. But they note that if an intercontinental missile were fired by mistake from the United States toward the Soviet Union, there might be time — maybe 10 to 15 minutes — to neutralize the wayward missile. In contrast, they insist, an accidental firing of a medium-range missile from Western Europe would allow only from 2½ to 4 minutes' warning time — scarcely enough to avoid a nuclear strike and Soviet retaliation.

This is a reasonable but one-sided argument, for it obviously applies as well to the Soviet medium-range nuclear missiles now targeted on NATO capitals. Officials here are being very tough about this. They are insisting that they cannot talk about limitation of strategic arms with the U.S. and the NATO allies unless the West agrees in advance not to deploy the new medium-range missiles in Germany and elsewhere in NATO countries. In short, Moscow rejects as outrageous China's preconditions for detente in the East, but insists on its own preconditions in the West.

Leaving aside the merits of the question, this is a masterpiece of diplomatic mistiming. For President Carter, after the recent false crisis concerning Cuba, the dilemma in Iran where his prudent retraint has left him open to the charge of weakness, and after his struggle in the Senate for ratification of the strategic arms treaty with the Soviet Union, is hardly likely now at the start of a presidential campaign to submit to Soviet demands that he withdraw his proposal to deploy the new missiles.

I came here, by way of Japan, to talk, by pre-arrangement in Washington, with officials here who had some vision of the world of the future. Where were we going in this world of shortages and terrorism? Did anybody in authority here have any new ideas about the coming age?

The Japanese do. More than officials here or even in Washington, they are fascinated by the possibilities of the 21st century, and are analyzing, planning and adapting their ancient culture to their new role as a modern industrial nation. And doing it in an impressive cooperative effort of government and business leaders, labor and management, the media, the universities, and the people. The success of this is already in the record.

Making progress

Moscow is quite different. It is making progress. You can see it in the bustle in the streets. There is a little more freedom to travel here now. They listen, without fear, to the Voice of America and the BBC. Housing is still a problem, but families now at least have the privacy of their own apartments.

But the government remains the same. It is overwhelmed by the tragic past and is backing into the future. Ask the leaders to speculate on the possibilities of the future, and they tell you the '80s will be a decade of unlimited military arms production unless Carter withdraws those damned new missile plans in Western Europe.

It is almost as if — as with some elements in the SALT debate in Washington — the puzzling ambiguities of present world politics were too much for the leaders of the present time, and they almost longed for the familiar but dangerous simplicities of the cold war.

Slim pickings for new ideas

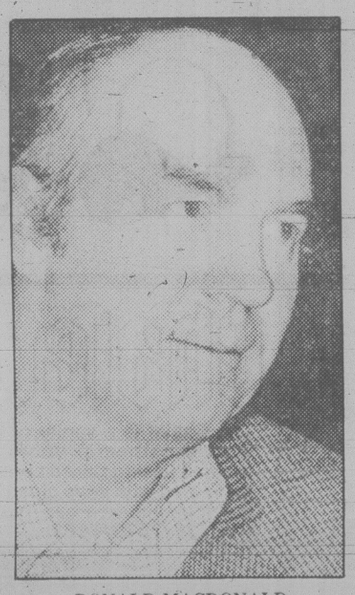

OTTAWA — "It'll be John Turner all right. This party knows a winner when it sees one," said the senior Liberal MP. "Put your money on Donald Macdonald said the back-room type. "He's got the better legs. He'll finish stronger."

For a day, I'd padded about the corridors collecting quotes like these about the Liberal leadership contest. And by the day's end they'd congealed into an indigestible lump. A raisin bun without any raisins.

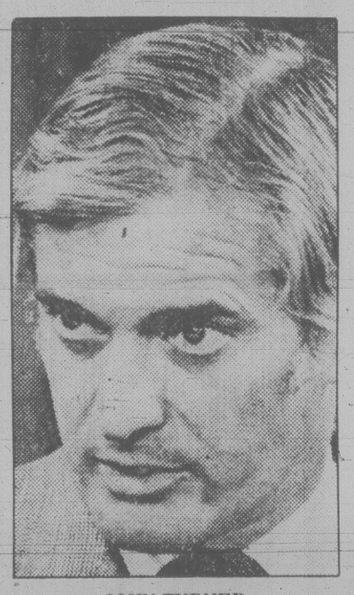

Essentially, a political leadership race is mindless. Winning is everything. No candidate can afford to think of anything else.

Indeed, for most candidates running alone is everything. They are "claim-stakers". They run, not to win but to stake a claim — to a seat in the cabinet, to a spot beneath the TV kleig lights, to make a name for the next time around.

Late in the day I came upon one real raisin. Or, rather, it was handed to me.

DONALD MACDONALD

JOHN TURNER
. . . off to a fast start

Rumor chase

I'd gone into the opposition lobby alongside the Commons' chamber to check out with Quebec Liberal leader Marc Lalonde a rumour, passed on by a party insider, that Lalonde had said at a private meeting that he could deliver three-quarters of the Quebec delegates to former Finance Minister Donald Macdonald. Lalonde said he'd said no such thing.

No big deal. The pro-Macdonald insider who'd started the original rumor had been trying to apply the cardinal rule of leadership races that to be seen to be winning is as important as to be actually winning.

Into the lobby came former Fisheries Minister Romeo LeBlanc. Had he heard, I asked, that Gerry Regan, the former Nova Scoia Premier, planned to run as a favorite son. No he hadn't, LeBlanc replied, though he had heard talk that someone ought to stake a claim on behalf of the Atlantic provinces.

My chore done, I turned to leave. LeBlanc stopped me. He had something he wanted to say.

"Don't you find something strange about this contest?" LeBlanc asked. I said something to the effect that the kind of rumors I'd been checking out are the kind that always fly about before the race begins, and fly even more thickly once it's actually on.

"No, no. That's not what I mean," LeBlanc continued. "I mean that we're going to get ourselves a new leader before we figure out the kind of party we want to be."

There were other rumors to be checked out — that former minister Monique Begin would run to stake a claim for women — and other Liberals going by who might be able to confirm or deny them. LeBlanc, an intense, idealistic type, had something to say: so I stayed.

"What I find strange, sad, is that we're not going to put ourselves through the crucible of policy debate," he said. "I believe myself in a certain brand of Liberalism. I'm prepared to bleed for it, and to fight for it. Now there isn't going to be any place to fight for it."

After I'd left LeBlanc, I stopped checking out any more rumors. He'd managed to make them seem, well, tacky.

A double irony is involved here. Trudeau has been the most intellectual of our prime ministers, excepting, maybe, Arthur Meighen in the '30s. Yet his stock of ideas — bilingualism, individual rights — has long since been exhausted.

In his last speeches to the party before he announced his resignation, in Toronto last weekend, Trudeau talked about the need to "re-build . . . to restructure." Instead, by resigning abruptly, and by urging the party to pick a new leader quickly (in March or April), Trudeau has made certain that the party, rather than finding new ideas will merely find itself a new leader.

To handicap the race is easy. Turner and Macdonald both are at even odds. The rest are off the board. Behind Macdonald are the parliamentary caucus, the party establishment, Trudeau's personal staff, most Quebecers, the left-wingers. Behind Turner is the west, the constituency rank-and-filers, the right wingers.

More stamina

Of the pair, Macdonald probably does have the better legs. Certainly the longer ones. Probably he will finish stronger, while Turner, like Teddy Kennedy, will run fastest before he starts.

There'll be lots of time for all that kind of stuff. This weekend indeed I have to check out the rumor that the candidate to watch at the convention will be Manitoba MP Lloyd Axworthy. He'll be there strictly as a claim-staker, for the next time around. Like other claim-stakers, Axworthy's role will be to influence others by the way he casts his vote after the first, for-the-show, ballot. Axworthy, you see, is a former aide to Turner, but a left-winger which tilts him to Macdonald, but then again a westerner which tilts him back to Turner.

Fun stuff, all of this. But mindless. Not strange really, as LeBlanc described it because this is the customary stuff of our politics. But sad. Sad that is that Trudeau's last legacy to his party has been to make certain that it will pick its new leader and thereafter go into the next election — in next summer or fall, at a guess — without picking up for itself a single new idea.

Get off fence

What really troubles me about the Quebec situation is the attitude of most people in this part of the country. Many assume that a no vote is a certainty but others couldn't care less whether Quebec goes or stays. In fact some actually express a preference for the former.

What does not seem to be understood is that if Quebec leaves it will be the end of Canada as a nation and ultimately the rest of us will probably be absorbed into the American union. The situation could hardly be more serious and it is about time we so regarded it and that the government of Canada got off the fence and took a strong stand for unity. There is simply no way that any province can legally quit our union and Joe Clark should stop temporizing with the problem and say so in no uncertain terms.

James Buchanan was president of the U.S. in the years immediately preceeding the civil war and his attitude towards the south was that while he did not want them to leave the union he really could not do anything to stop them if their people wanted secession. Sound familiar? Unfortunately, all too much so! Today it is widely believed that if Buchanan had shown the firmness that Lincoln was later to demonstrate, there never would have been a civil war. It was only because the southern states thought that they could get away with it on the basis of the weak-kneed statements of the then chief executive, that they made the attempt. Let's not make the same mistake but urge Prime Minister Clark to stiffen his backbone and stand firm for a united Canada without any ifs, ands, or buts.

The truth is that we are not too centralized despite Mr. Bennett's claim to the contrary. It is quite the other way as more and more of the powers of the central government are being allowed to lapse or to be taken over by the provinces. I call as my witness, Jacques Parizeau, now Quebec's Finance Minister, who once declared that Canada has become so decentralized that the federal government is inefficient. He also added: "If we were to freeze in the constitution the present situation, I strongly doubt that we would ever be able to proceed in Canada to a rational planning. No country should be authorized to fragment its decision-making power as we have done and, worse still, as so many constitution-makers propose to do more and more."

Sure, this was written in 1967 but it is even truer and more relevant today. Besides, Mr. Parizeau has repeated himself, in even stronger terms, since becoming a minister in the PQ government. — F. L. P. Anderson, 409-2174 Cadboro Bay Road.

Remarkable man

In his abdication all Canadians can now assess the character and accomplishments of our former prime minister. To us Pierre Trudeau aroused an intensely ambivalent reaction, and while in power it was too easy to vent some of the subconscious frustration of our own lives — the blaming of our problems on one politician — on someone whose consciousness, whose style, whose presence was so foreign to what we imagine a Canadian to be. Pierre Trudeau was a remarkable man, someone who retrospectively can teach us something about ourselves and about the drama of human existence.

First of all Trudeau carried an immense sense of his own intellectual and — if we can say it — spiritual integrity. This confidence enabled him to improvise his way beyond the predictable rhythms and cant of politics to an inner region of aesthetic sensitivity and imagination that while often infuriating his opponents and mystifying the more prosaic members of the electorate, nevertheless delivered a freshness, a vitality and an articulated brilliance to the stage of political life.

And this I believe is the measure of the man: that in spite of the agonies of his own personal life, the constant criticism — and at times abuse — from the press and public, he managed to uphold a dignity and passion that always gave us some drama, some unexpected perception of the moment. He had at times a fierce sense of his own rightness, and this often suggested an ambience of arrogance, of contempt for his critics, and yet, to those apparently who knew him best — his wife, his friends — it was his gentleness, his shyness, his vulnerability that were the salient characteristics of his manner.

No, Pierre Trudeau did this one magnificent thing: he created passion where there was dullness, elegance where there was drabness, spontaneity where there was artifice, mystique where there was ordinariness, piquancy where there was blandness. In short he was a human being of exceptional subtlety and power, a man who showed to us a microcosm of the intelligence, order and contradiction of the universe.

He stretched our boundaries, he challenged our vision, he disturbed and exalted us. He was one Canadian who could sit at a table with Socrates, Picasso, Buddha and Dante — and, no doubt, gain the admiration of all. — Robin W. Carlsen, 1225 Sunnyside Avenue.

Trudeau: The wrong time to quit

By ANTHONY WESTELL

'He always put his own interests ahead of the party'

OTTAWA — Pierre Trudeau's resignation as Liberal leader comes about a year too late.

Or to look at it another way, about a year too early.

It was clear by last year that Trudeau had run out his string as prime minister. A substantial majority of English-speaking voters wanted a change in national leadership and there was never much chance that an election campaign could turn things around.

By clinging to power, Trudeau merely ensured that his personality and the uneven record of his government would be the issues, rather than the real problems facing the country.

He ensured also, of course, that the Liberals would be defeated and that the country would divide at the polls along the chasm of language.

Had he been more realistic about his position a year ago and been willing to stand down, a new Liberal leader and the new Conservative leader, Joe Clark, might have fought a useful and constructive election in which the country, including Quebec, would have had a real choice.

By announcing now his intention to retire in the spring, Trudeau is making another mistake and, probably, again for selfish reasons.

He is right when he says that the reconstruction of the Liberal party will require new leadership, but his timing is all wrong.

In Parliament, the party is only just settling down to opposition. Its principal task for the next year or so should be to challenge the government on the great issues of the day: Energy policy, inflation and economic growth, the reform of political institutions and the place of Quebec in confederation.

In such a process, the Liberals could hope to redefine their own policies, to expose the weaknesses of the Conservatives and, perhaps most important, to give their young MPs an opportunity to learn, mature and display leadership qualities.

Outside Parliament, Liberals are only just recovering from the shock of defeat and loss of power. They have hardly begun to think about new policies and about ways to reorganize and reinvigorate their political organization.

Instead of having time to think, learn and develop, while the Tories are worn down by the problems of government, the Liberals are now plunged into a leadership contest.

In Parliament, with a lame-duck leader, they will not be a significant opposition. The natural leaders will become candidates and will be too busy chasing delegates to pay much attention to the House of Commons.

The task of opposing the government will be left mainly to the New Democrats, who will no doubt make the most of the opportunity for publicity.

Across the country party members will be organized in factions around the various candidates, and the national and provincial organizations are bound to suffer.

None of this might matter too much if the results were to be a new Liberal leader in the spring to take up the task of opposition and reconstruction with more enthusiasm than Trudeau has displayed. But in fact we are likely to see the Liberal leadership convention followed almost immediately by a general election.

Prime Minister Clark's position in the Commons is already precarious. If he could find a convincing excuse, he would probably hold an election as soon as possible, while the Liberals are in disarray, in the hope of gaining a clear majority.

But he can't afford to appear opportunistic or unsporting, and the Liberals will surely stay away from votes in droves rather than defeat the government and give Clark an opportunity to go to the country.

Come spring and a new Liberal leader, however, the situation will change. Both sides may then be eager for a test of strength rather than a protracted crisis in a House too evenly divided for comfort and stable government.

So once again the country's problems will be postponed in favor of electoral politics.

It would have been much better for the Liberals, for the government and for the country if Trudeau had been prepared to soldier on through 1980, with a leadership contest and an election to follow in 1981, after a year of solid work in Parliament and in the Liberal party.

But Trudeau has always tended to put his own interests ahead of those of his party. He took the Liberal leadership in the first place entirely on his own terms; and he is leaving it in the same way.

History, I think, will award him fair marks as a head of government in extraordinarily difficult times, but poor marks as the leader of the political party.

His failure to recruit and encourage potential successors is now compounded by an untimely retirement.

Bitter Ont. strike 'like Deep South'

MICHELE LANDSBERG
Toronto Star

Two hundred women marched up and down in front of the Radio Shack warehouse in Barrie the other day, bundled against the snow that came stinging down on a raw wind. Behind a darkened window in the warehouse, Radio Shack employees filmed their striking co-workers, and across the street police kept silent watch from the warmth of their cars.

It was a strange confrontation because there was no one to confront. The 200 women, from a wide range of Toronto women's groups and unions, had risen before dawn to get there. They were celebrating Women's Solidarity Day by walking the line with the 46 women warehouse workers on strike at Radio Shack. But management personnel, and workers who have been crossing the picket lines, had hidden inside the plant by 6 a.m. to avoid meeting them.

Anyway, the real battle is between two clashing sets of beliefs: The fervent conviction of workers that Ontario law should protect their right to union security, and the tough, union-busting philosophy of the Texas-based Tandy Corp., which owns Radio Shack.

It's a standoff. For a year now, since the workers at Radio Shack won certification as a union, the company has blocked and stalled and dragged its feet, and still there's no first contract.

The company has been convicted by the Ontario Labor Relations Board of unjust firing of union workers, interfering with the right to organize and defying board orders. Still no first contract. There may not be one at all, unless the board forces the company to settle.

"We need a union in there," one of the strikers told me, stamping her numbed feet. "They pay zilch benefits . . . just 40 per cent of hospital insurance premiums and nothing else. No sick days until after two years. Minimum vacations. A half hour unpaid lunch break."

"And the foremen play favorites a lot. Five minutes before quitting time they'll tell you to change shifts the next day. If that means babysitter problems, well, you can always quit. And layoffs? Listen, I've seen foremen pull names from a hat at the end of a shift, and if your name was pulled that was goodbye, no matter how long you worked there."

The company's last offer before the women went on strike in August made its intentions clear. It offered an average 6 per cent raise on a merit basis, no change in overtime, vacation, shift premiums, sick pay or benefits. And it made outrageous demands, seemingly calculated to block a settlement: An elaborate code of conduct to be made part of the agreement; a refusal of compulsory dues check-off; a clause that would fine the union $10,000 merely for mentioning the company's name outside the plant.

The whole history of the organizing drive is loaded with creepy overtones of deep South union-busting. There's the company security chief, for example, who told the board he's a good friend of the Barrie policeman in charge of maintaining order on the picket line. Testimony by a former company security man that the firm hired spies to infiltrate the union. And company "information sheets" given to workers — among the most scurrilous I've ever read. They slam and distort the positions of both the union and the Labor Relations Board in a frontal attack which the board itself found alarmingly close to "contempt."

The crux of the battle, though, is union security. The women on the picket line have staked their livelihood on it. "Sisters, unite! Stand up and fight!" they shouted on the line the other day. But union security is being whittled away each day the fight is prolonged, as local housewives flock to work Radio Shack's special "housewife shift": 9 a.m. to 3 p.m., minimum wage, no security, and summers off if you want.

How can a company get away with stalling on a first contract, even though the union has won its right to bargain? Simple. Ontario, unlike some other provinces, has no law insisting that companies come to terms with a newly-formed union. If the company can hang on long enough — and Tandy, with its annual sales of more than $1 billion and its boast that no union has ever got a foot in the door, can hang on — then there's a good chance that it can break the union. You can't live forever on strike pay.

And there are no laws in Ontario to give a union the compulsory dues check-off it needs to survive. Way back in 1946, Justice Ivan Rand ruled, in an historic decision, that "the organization of labor must in a civilized manner be elaborated and strengthened for its essential function in an economy of free enterprise . . ."

"I consider it perfectly equitable that employees should be required to shoulder their portion of the burden of expense . . . they must take the burden along with the benefit."

On the windy picket line, the women weigh their chances against the Texas cowboys, and pray that the Ontario Labor Relations Board will see it their way.

A face-lift in Moscow

By CHARLOTTE Y. SALISBURY
New York Times

I have a few Russian friends whom I treasure even though years may pass between our meetings because of the vagaries of the Soviet authorities in issuing visas.

Recently when I was in Moscow for the first time in a decade, I called Natasha. "My God!" she cried. "Someone told me you were dead! I'll pick you up in my car at seven. We'll have dinner." As I waited in the hotel vestibule, rain spitting down on the gloomy boulevard, I wondered what Natasha would be like. On our last visit she had begged me: "Please write about our life the way it is so people will know how bad it is for us." For 10 years I had heard nothing from my Russian friends and had no idea if my letter had gotten through to them.

A bright green Fiat came suddenly out of the mist, screeched to a stop, and there was Natasha at the wheel. "Get in, get in." She looked marvellous. Eyes flashing, talking nonstop, she whirled me through the streets. The parking lot at her building was full — "everyone has a car now," she told me. She let me out at the door while she looked for a space. Soon she came running, her bright flowered umbrella blown inside out in the modest breeze. "Oh, oh, nothing works," and to my look of surprise at the windshield wipers she held, "I have to take them off when I leave the car or they will be stolen."

The apartment looked the way I remembered it, but where was the collection of miniature liquor bottles that had filled a big cabinet? Gone, sold, as is nearly everything Natasha receives, has or collects. She has an incurable passion for things, possessions, for gadgets impossible to buy in Moscow, and she is always "trading up."

"I have lost 16 pounds," she boasted as she took off her coat and pirouetted. The 10 years had served her well. She certainly looked younger and prettier.

Sonya was coming for dinner, too, and when she walked in I hardly recognized her. In a puffy raincoat and highheeled boots she was almost as chic as a smart French woman. I looked at my friends and asked: "What is it? What have you done? How can you both look like this after so many years?" Sonya said she had spent part of her vacation having the lines and wrinkles in her neck removed. "Everyone is having a face-lift — even men who are actors or otherwise in the public view," she said. "Why don't you do it? It makes us feel better about ourselves. Have your face lifted." When I said it was terribly expensive at home, she replied: "Come to Moscow. It doesn't cost anything here."

"Have you noticed my teeth?" Natasha asked. "Americanski porcelain." She smiled, showing me a glistening set of pure white teeth. "I spent two months in the hospital, all my teeth were ground down to points and capped so they look the way they used to."

All free, I thought. Paid for by the same government that kept these women in prison for years during the Stalin era for no reason except that they were part of the intelligentsia. From the Gulag Archipelago to the plastic surgeon, courtesy of the Kremlin.

Natasha had been in Bulgaria. "I can't believe the stores. There is so much to buy." And she opened her closet to show me her prize purchase — a white lamb's-wool coat with a huge fur collar. "Made for export to London," she bragged.

But her greatest acquisition was to come. "I can't tell you how hard it was to get," she said. "I got my Bulgarian friend to ask her English friend, and she had an American friend, and now, just today, I've got it — Stop Smoke."

I looked blank. "Stop Smoke," she repeated. "Everyone in Moscow is crazy to get it. But I am first." This, it turned out, was the latest gadget, made-in-America, and Moscow was wild about it. A set of filters that were supposed to make it easy to cut down on smoking. I congratulated Natasha, but inside something turned over. Stop Smoke. The trouble Natasha had taken to get it. The planning, conniving, the joy, the risks.

Ten years ago, Sonya had told me she was happy each night because it meant one more day of her life was over. She didn't seem to feel that way anymore. She had been to France. She was upset at what she saw there. She knew a woman who had three villas, all fully staffed, in Paris, Lebanon and Switzerland. And she knew women who struggled to feed their children. "We don't have that inequality here," she said. Now she appreciated her government. The Russian people are lazy on the whole, and slow, and need to be told what to do, she felt. Unknowingly she herself showed the effects of this nursemaid system. During a visit to the West she became panicky, rushed back to Moscow and was relieved and thankful to be home.

Natasha drove me back to the hotel. I said how happy I was to see her and Sonya looking so well and to know life is better and easier for them.

"Yes," she replied. "It is true. We have more things and can travel a bit. We aren't afraid anymore. It's fine for the younger generation. But I am over 50, my husband is nearly 70. I went through the camps, the war. It has come to late for us — 20 years too late."

And she drove off in her new car, with her face-lift, her new white teeth, her Stop Smoke. Into the Moscow gloom.

Dark side of new life

The Washington Post

MOSCOW — For every bright fact or statistic about the well-being of people in Russia, there is an opposite, often more meaningful story.

Though comparative Soviet statistics on matters like alcoholism, divorce and illegitimacy are scarce, the official press has described them as adverse social phenomena. And it has noted that, while generally lower per capita than in some Western countries, all are on the rise.

Crime, seldom mentioned in the press 15 years ago, no longer can be ignored. This year, Moscow has been frightened by the so-called "carpet murders" of four young women whose decapitated bodies have been found wrapped in carpet or plastic sheets in a secluded pond. Recently, a retired general's wife was strangled during a robbery in her apartment, and Muscovites casually advise Western friends not to walk alone at night.

Divorce rates are soaring. According to the weekly Nedelya, there are 9 million single-parent homes in the Soviet Union — one-sixth of all families with children.

Alcoholism is growing, with children drinking and committing crimes, and drunkenness among women climbing rapidly, according to the Literaturnaya Gazeta.

There is full employment, but the inefficient economy has soaked up virtually every able-bodied man and woman, creating the prospect of an imminent labor shortage. Last month the state offered new incentives to the country's 31 million retirees to return to work. Many will.

Foreign investment up

OTTAWA (CP) — The book value of oreign long-term investment into Canda at the end of 1976 was $81.4 billion, up 8 per cent from 1975, says a Statistics Canada statement just released.

United States investors owned almost hree-fourths of the investment, down rom 77 per cent in 1975, while British esidents owned eight per cent and those rom all other countries, 18 per cent.

Two-thirds of the increase of $12.5 billion came from larger foreign borrowings is foreign holdings of bonds grew by 38 per ent:

The increase of accumulated foreign long-term investment in 1976 was up from more moderate rises of 14 per cent in 1975 and 10 per cent in 1974.

More than 60 per cent of the $9 billion in new bonds sold to foreigners were issued by the three levels of government, with provincial utilities expanding by $4.4 billion for a total $16.8 billion.

In the private sector, manufacturing accounted for the largest increase in foreign long-term investment which rose by $2 billion to $20.5 billion as of Dec. 31, 1976.

Financial enterprises recorded the next biggest increase, up $1.8 billion to $9.4 billion.

Construction value up

TORONTO (CP) — Value of construction starts in Canada during the first 10 months of 1979 was $14.8 billion compared with $13.9 billion the same period last year, says CanaData.

However, the number of dwelling unit starts for the period was down 12 per cent from a year earlier and the total number of job starts in all categories was down four per cent.

Metal shortage in 80s?

EDMONTON (CP) — Canada and other western industrialized countries face a potential shortage of strategic metals in the 1980s, experts say.

Japan, the countries comprising the European Economic Community, and the U.S. are running out of metals for their industries and are increasingly dependent upon imports from Third World countries.

"We (Canada) probably have a shorter list of deficiencies than any other industrialized country," says George Miller, director of the Centre for Resource Studies at Queen's University in Kingston, Ont.

Although Canada is the world's third largest mining country in volume, it is still completely dependent upon imports of about a dozen metals and minerals which it either does not produce enough of or does not have.

Bob Shank, director of the resources and development division, mineral policy sector, of the federal department of energy, mines and resources, said in a recent telephone interview a study into Canada's vulnerability on strategic imports was begun a couple of months ago.

Shank said Canada's supply of strategic metals could be cut off through the disruption of imports as a result of political actions elsewhere in the world.

There is no known substitute, for example, for a vital iron alloy import such as chromium. The alloy helps make steel resistant to high temperatures, corrosion and chemicals.

Shank said Canada is also in the "same boat" as other western countries in depending upon imports of other iron alloys such as manganese and vanadium. Manganese gives steel high tensile strength and vanadium gives it hardness.

Luxury liner soon going condominium

ARLINGTON, Wash. (AP) — The SS nited States will return to sea with a ew look financed in a novel way, says wner Richard Hadley. The luxury liner going condominium, with staterooms oing for as much as $149,500.

Hadley — who lives in this farming ommunity near the foothills of the ascades when he's not building condominiums in Hawaii or office buildings n Seattle — hopes the 330-metre ocean iner will become "the greatest cruise hip in the world."

The ship, the last luxury liner to fly the U.S. flag, was placed in service in 1952 and sailed for 17 years before its owners defaulted on a federal mortgage and the U.S. government seized the property. Now it's out of service in Norfolk, Va.

Hadley bought the ship a year ago through his newly created corporation, United States Cruises Inc., for a $500,000 down payment toward its $5-million price. That was a steal, he says, because the liner cost $80 million when it was built, and building it today would cost $400 million.

The company will spend another $30 million to $35 million on refurbishing. Below decks, the ship will be transformed into a one-class — first-class — cruiser for 1,300 passengers instead of the 2,000 it was designed to carry.

"We don't want a pack-'em-in operation," Hadley says. "We'll have the lowest passenger population for a ship of our size by far. If a person likes to cruise and is affluent, it's the only thing that makes any sense."

To finance refurbishing, Hadley plans to sell one-sixth of the ship's space as, in effect, condominiums.

Investors, who would be members of the United States Cruising Society, could buy staterooms ranging in price from $11,500 to $149,500.

Members would have exclusive use of the rooms two weeks each year for 20 years — guaranteeing future vacations at current prices — and travel at 40 per cent of the published public fare. Members could spend as many as 200 days cruising at the reduced rate on a space-available basis.

Hadley said 100 memberships had been sold or were "in the works" and expects his regular prices to be competitive — about $165 a day, perhaps.

The ship, which will be fuelled by a liquid converted from coal, will spend half its time sailing between Los Angeles and Honolulu and half on voyages to such ports as Stockholm, Singapore and Rio de Janiero.

Oil, gas found in Brazeau

CALGARY (CP) — Petro-Canada and Amoco Canada Petroleum Co. Ltd. have announced an oil and natural gas discovery in the Brazeau area about 140 kilometres northwest of Red Deer.

Petro-Canada, operator of the well, said tests indicate an estimated daily flow rate of 3,180 barrels of oil and 14.1 million cubic feet of natural gas.

Petro-Canada, the state-owned oil company, has a 50-per-cent interest, with Amoco holding the rest.

North America drillers' delight

By ERIC HAMOVITCH

MONTREAL (CP) — Conditions for oil companies are so much more favorable in North America that the United States and Canada accounted for more than 88 per cent of all exploratory oil wells drilled in the world during a recent decade, says a top Exxon Corp. official.

North America offers "a number of very favorable economic, technical and geological factors," K. Pipes, exploration manager of Exxon Corp. of New York, the world's largest oil company, told a United Nations energy conference here Tuesday.

Figures contained in his presentation showed that between 1967 and 1976, about 116,000 exploratory oil wells were drilled. Of these, about 84,000 were in the U.S., 19,000 in Canada and only 13,000 in the rest of the world.

Pipes said facilities for drilling in North America are highly developed and geological conditions are such that many deposits occur close to one another.

Further, access to oil-producing land "is largely completely open, with virtually no obligations and full title" to the land, he said, adding that "financial incentives are superior to many foreign areas."

His paper contained an estimate that recoverable oil resources total about 2.1 trillion barrels, of which about half has already been discovered.

Another paper presented at the conference estimated that probable reserves of liquid petroleum total 676 billion barrels and reserves of natural gas total 75.6 billion cubic metres.

OIL TURMOIL has these two leading Alberta Tories at loggerheads. Prime Minister Joe Clark and Alberta Premier Peter Lougheed have announced some modest success in their oil price talks, though the battle over a method for taxing higher petroleum industry revenues is far from over.

Seagram bid shot in arm

LONDON (Reuter) — A $43.36-million takeover bid by Seagram Co. Ltd of Montreal for George Sandeman port and sherry group of Britain brought a big jump Tuesday in Sandeman share values on the London Stock Exchange.

Shares leapt by the equivalent of £0.60 ($1.53) to £1.45 ($3.67) in early trading.

Seagram ranks as the world's biggest wines and spirits producer but has no significant involvement in Sandeman specialties of sherry and port.

Founded in 1790 in a coffee house, Sandeman is the world's largest port shipper. It has extensive vineyards and cellars in Spain as well as in Portugal and its products are exported to 108 countries.

Company Vice-Chairman David Sandeman said in an interview he is very happy with the terms of the takeover and confident that it would go through.

"We could no longer go on as an independent company because of taxes and other factors," he said, adding that Seagram has given assurances about retaining Sandeman's individuality.

Interest rates: Don't cheer yet

OTTAWA (CP) — Prime lending rates are not expected to go higher than the record 15 per cent now being charged, but financial experts do not expect any marked reduction for several months.

In a series of interviews they discounted a slight decline in Canadian mortgage rates and in the prime rate being charged by some U.S. banks this week.

The reduction to 13¾ per cent in Canadian mortgage rates for mortgages renewable every five years was only to be expected they said. And the fall in the U.S. prime rate to 15¼ per cent from 15½ and 15¾ per cent was expected to bounce back up.

Canadian rates normally lag behind U.S. rates both on the way up and on the way down. The Bank of Canada has been increasing its prime rate steadily with those in the U.S., saying the action was to encourage foreign investors to continue placing their money here.

Doug Peters, Toronto Dominion Bank chief economist, said the U.S. decline is so slight "Canadian rates don't necessarily have to follow."

He said interest rates "are at such a high level and so volatile that it's hard to tell" if U.S. rates are really on the way down.

Bob Baguley, Royal Bank of Canada chief economist, concurred, saying Canadian rates will stay where they are until there is no doubt U.S. rates are receding, and that could take six months.

Forrest Rogers, Bank of Nova Scotia economic adviser, said

"It'll probably drop a couple of percentage points within the next two or three months and be down to 12 per cent by next summer.

"It does look as if the U.S. is moving more clearly into its recession."

But all agreed the demand for money remains so high in Canada that there is no reason to reduce rates here.

Commenting on the drop from 14¾ per cent on mortgage interest by the Bank of Montreal Monday, president Frank Clayton of Clayton Research said:

"No one was lending at that rate anyway. Thirteen and three-quarters is the effective rate. Now they're (the Bank of Montreal) are just saying what everyone else is doing."

Gold price takes $10 jump

LONDON (AP) — Gold prices jumped $10 an ounce in Europe today, spurred by a surge in the price of silver following reports the United States might enlarge its silver stockpile.

The U.S. dollar fell sharply in Tokyo and opened lower against major European currencies. It had closed in New York on Tuesday at 1.1713 to the Canadian dollar, up from 1.1711 on Monday.

Gold prices rose $5 an ounce at the opening and climbed another $5 dollars by mid-morning to cross the $400 an ounce barrier. The metal was trading at midday in London at $404.50 an ounce, its highest level since Oct. 10. It had closed in London on Tuesday at $394.25.

In Zurich, where gold reached an all-time peak of $444 an ounce Oct. 2, the metal jumped from Tuesday's close of $393.75 to trade at $404.

Silver rose almost $1 an ounce in London today to just under $18 an ounce.

The U.S. dollar fell back in Tokyo after the Bank of Japan stepped in to help its currency. After topping 250-yen to the dollar on Tuesday for the first time in more than two years, the U.S. dollar closed almost two yen lower today at 249.65 yen.

Education split rapped

By AB KENT

Premier Bill Bennett's separation of education powers may spell trouble for universities with co-operative programs in community colleges, suggests University of Victoria president Dr. Howard Petch.

But he sees retention of the university portfolio by Dr. Pat McGeer as a good omen and an indicator of continuing support for universities by the minister.

McGeer went this week from minister of education, science and technology to minister for universities, science and communications.

Oak Bay MLA Brian Smith is now education minister with responsibility for the public school system, colleges, community colleges, open learning institutes and technical schools.

"I think splitting the post-secondary level will cause problems," Petch predicted.

For example, UVic has a co-operative arrangement with all community colleges outside the Victoria and Vancouver areas and operates a joint program with Selkirk College.

Now they will report to different ministries with the possible result that policy lines will cross.

In addition, UVic in the past has had trouble with funding this kind of program, not getting authority until July for programs scheduled to commence in September.

Such short notice has made it difficult to find staff, Petch noted, and with two ministries to deal with, this kind of problem may get worse.

But Petch said he is pleased that McGeer has retained the universities.

"I'm glad to have him as our champion."

By JAKE BANKY

The genteel jostling for prime office space has begun in the wake of last week's cabinet shuffle and the outcome can sometimes show where the real-power lies.

Pat McGeer has managed to elbow Education Minister Brian Smith out of what has been the education minister's office.

Although McGeer's new ministry of science, technology and communications is dwarfed by the education portfolio, McGeer keeps his spacious first-floor quarters overlooking the rose garden.

Smith gets a cramped third-floor office site that has been sitting empty since the demise of the deregulation ministry. Eventually he will move into a larger basement suite now under construction.

Garde Gardom most unwillingly is vacating the traditional attorney-general's office to make way for his successor, Allan Williams.

Leaving behind his specially-ordered, crimson, wall-to-wall carpet will be a cruel blow to Gardom, the new minister of intergovernmental relations.

Gardom will move temporarily into an inadequate, two-room office, most recently the temporary home of Ombudsman Dr. Karl Friedmann, until something more suitable can be found.

While he's there he can contemplate the fate that evicts him from his beloved office while Grace McCarthy is allowed to keep the provincial secretary's office though she lost that portfolio last year.

Labor Minister Jack Heinrich, a new boy like Smith, gets the office that goes with the job.

However for a few days he is doubling up with Williams who is waiting for Gardom to move.

The third cabinet newcomer, Stephen Rogers, gets a first-floor suite only slightly smaller than that of his predecessor as environment minister, Rafe Mair.

Mair and all the other cabinet veterans retain their territorial rights. Those with new portfolios will, in due course, get new titles on their office doors.

One ministerial suite remains vacant, a pleasant, six-room apartment which awaits the appointment of a new minister of tourism before the end of the year.

However it doesn't have the usual executive washroom.

Industrial waste on Rogers' plate

The problem of industrial waste disposal will be given a high priority by new Environment Minister Stephen Rogers.

"It is a matter of some urgency," he said in an interview Tuesday.

What has been done in the past, says Rogers, is that industry has been told what it may or may not discharge as waste.

That must change, he said.

Industry now must be told how and where to dispose of waste which may not be discharged into sewers, and be required to pay for that disposal.

Rogers suggested government might encourage private enterprise to go into the business of industrial waste disposal.

The new minister's particular concern is the disposition of toxic chemicals. He said it is unacceptable for B.C. to ship toxic waste to Oregon for disposal at special facilities there.

"People are saying 'We don't want your garbage any more.' We are going to have to be responsible for our own mess," he said.

Rogers has asked ministry staff to report on the quantity of liquid industrial waste, toxic and otherwise, and possible methods of dealing with it.

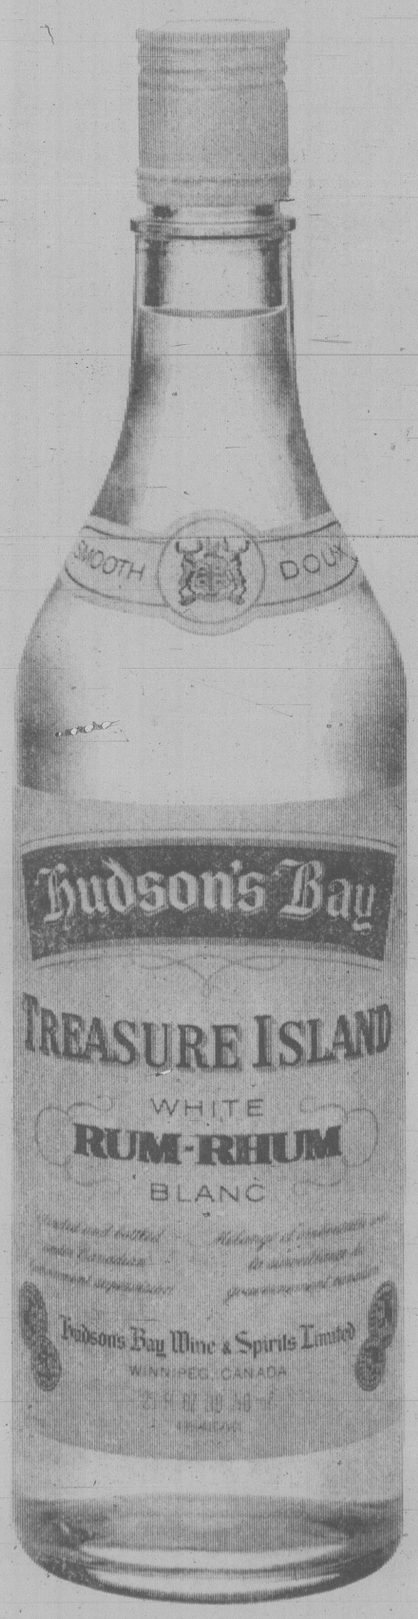

Architects eye bylaw change

B.C. architects will be asked to consider changing their style of practice in the next decade when they hold their annual convention here beginning Friday.

The Architectural Institute of B.C. says that, faced with competition from fraudulent design services, architects will consider changing their bylaws to allow unrestricted advertising, providing it doesn't contravene their code of ethics.

The institute says it hopes to give the public greater access to architectural services that to now have been considered available only to big business and government.

Ferry skipper wins job back

The B.C. Ferry Corp. has been ordered to reinstate Captain Gerry Stalling, fired last year after a ferry he skippered slammed into the Saltery Bay dock near Powell River.

The Labor Relations Board accepted Stalling's contention Tuesday that the accident in September, 1978, was caused by a mechanical failure and awarded him $30,000 in back pay.

In its written decision, the board agreed Stalling should be suspended for one month for actions following the accident.

Corporation lawyers charged at the hearing Stalling was "deceitful and therefore untrustworthy" and "lied about circumstances of the collision."

They asked that the corporation be allowed to give him severance pay rather than have him reinstated. Failing that, they wanted him reinstated as a seaman rather than a relief master.

The board's decision reversed a company internal investigation that found Stalling responsible for the accident because he approached the dock too fast.

Stalling's case was widely publicized earlier this year when corporation officials asked the courts to cite Wendy Fitzgibbons, editor of the Powell River Town Crier, for contempt because she would not reveal her sources for articles on the case.

In an article five days after the accident, Fitzgibbons published stories alleging Stalling was not on the bridge at the time of the accident.

Testimony at the arbitration hearing placed Stalling on the bridge and in control at theime of the accident.

Phone bill release slapped

A union lawyer says he wants to know why the Labor Relations Board asked the B.C. Telephone Co. to turn over confidential information about ferry workers' telephone accounts to the B.C. Ferry Corp.

The information from monthly phone accounts is being used by ferry corporation lawyers in an attempt to prove at a LRB hearing that union members organized an illegal strike.

B.C. Tel handed over copies of customers' accounts to the corporation lawyer following a request from the board that a company officer appear before it with the documents.

Board chairman Don Munroe said B.C. Tel security officer Leo McGregor was summonsed by the board and is on stand-by.

He has not given evidence at the hearing but the documents — accounts of four union members, one of whom has been fired by the corporation — were handed over to the corporation lawyer, who distributed them to witnesses and the board during the inquiry.

The overdue account of a fifth customer in Nanaimo, who apparently is unrelated to the ferry corporation and union dispute, was inadvertently included along with the account of one of the ferry workers.

Munroe said the confidential information would not be sent to the other party in the hearing unless the union had specifically requested it.

John Brewin, lawyer for the 2,700-member B.C. Ferry and Marine Workers Union, said it is offensive for B.C. Tel to release these bills.

"No subpoena has been produced. And the corporation didn't produce any witnesses from the telephone company," he said.

Brewin said following the hearing he will discus the issue with union officials, who should demand changes in B.C. Tel policy and LRB practices regarding the release of confidential information.

Hearing told curve inverted

By PAUL MINVIELLE

GANGES — It was a little like David picking Goliath's pocket for the pebbles to arm his sling.

In this instance — the Pollution Control Board hearings for appeals against a permit allowing a sewer outfall in Ganges Harbor — there were two Davids and the Capital Regional District was cast in the role of Goliath.

As in the first sitting, a four-hour evening session in a school gym, there were accusations against the CRD, with more than one appellant complaining about being unable to extract information from district officials.

One letter from CRD executive director Dennis Young was termed "arrogant," and the amount of public input into the decision to install a sewer system in Ganges was called into question.

While the Monday night session featured mostly housewives pitted against the big CRD guns, the Tuesday offering was massive quantities of hard evidence — much of it gathered and/or paid for by the CRD — delivered by two very different men, neither of whom has what could be called a direct involvement in the issue.

Teeing off in the morning was Dr. Herman Kirchmeir, a retired linguistics professor who trotted out large maps with a variety of overlays and his own charts to challenge some of the conclusions arrived at by consultants to the CRD.

In a 3½-hour discourse, Kirchmeir said that in checking a particular equation and plotted curve (used to compute the mixing of effluent with seawater) he'd used his high school math text, a book he last studied in 1929.

Nonetheless, he said, the math didn't check out and the curve being used by the CRD was, in effect, upside-down.

He appealed to the board to cancel the permit on the basis that the CRD and the Pollution Control Branch (the issuer of the permit) had acted on incomplete, insufficient and incorrect information.

It was a tough act to follow, but Don Watmough didn't hesitate in turning again to mounds of technical information to build his case against the sewer system in general and the outfall in particular.

Watmough was one of the appellants in a control board hearing five years ago that ended with the board cancelling a permit that would have allowed the dumping of raw sewage into the harbor.

For the past 10 years, Watmough, who has a bachelor's degree in marine biology, has been a planner doing environmental impact studies for the Greater Vancouver Regional District. His interest in the Gulf Islands, he said, is strictly that of a British Columbian who visits the area often.

Watmough launched a three-pronged attack, submitting U.S. Environmental Protection studies to support his contention that sewage treatment plants simply don't work.

Watmough cited various studies and experiments over the years that showed the general drift of anything dumped in Ganges Harbor is right back into the harbor.

At one point Watmough asked PCB officials present if the permit to the CRD for the Ganges outfall was the first in B.C. to contain the restriction that effluent be released only on an outgoing tide.

One of them said it was. Later, Watmough asked the same group if the permit was also the first in the province calling for treatment of effluent with ultraviolet light.

One of them answered "yes" before P.G. Jarman, solicitor for the branch, protested to control board chairman Dr. C.J.G. Mackenzie that the questions should be asked by the board or by the CRD, but not by Watmough during his presentation.

Watmough then produced a study supporting his conviction ultraviolet treatment won't be effective.

Because of the novel aspects of the system, Watmough said: "If I was going to risk something brand new, I'd do it in a place where it's less likely to do permanent damage."

In highlighting the lack of data backing up the CRD's application for the permit, Watmough quoted the pollution control branch's own resume: "It would seem unfortunate that much of the data gathered was obtained in areas some distance away from the finally recommended point of discharge."

Watmough also challenged the commonly-held notion that the harbor is polluted. Citing federal government and other surveys, he pointed out that most of the harbor is remarkably clean, and except for the three relatively small problem areas, shellfish harvesting is permitted everywhere in the harbor.

He quoted an Environment Canada report that states most of the harbor would probably be closed if a sewer outfall were installed.

Watmough also produced the CRD's own reports on sewer treatment facilities at Lester B. Pearson College of the Pacific and the Sidney sewage treatment plant, both operating under CRD auspices.

In Sidney, between 1965 and 1979, the plant has exceeded levels of pollution allowed in its permit 80 per cent of the time.

At Pearson College, the system has malfuntioned to the point where raw sewage is often being pumped directly into the sea.

PCB spill at Kaiser mine probed

SPARWOOD (CP) — The provincial pollution control branch is investigating a confirmed 100-gallon spill and several unconfirmed spills of polychlorinated biphenyls (PCBs) at the Kaiser Resources Ltd. coal mine near Sparwood.

The spill occurred almost two months ago when an electrical transformer was accidently broken.

The spill was cleaned up immediately under the guidance of the pollution control branch, company officials said Monday.

The chemical is a proven cancer-causing agent used in many electrical transformers as a liquid coolant.

A provincial environment spokesman said the spill did not occur near a water system and was not considered dangerous.

No extra security before death fall

A coroner's jury was told Tuesday night that extra security precautions were not taken by the staff of James Bay Lodge for an 88-year-old woman who was known to have had suicidal tendencies.

Ada Lock died Nov. 19 after she fell out of her fourth-floor window at the lodge at 336 Simcoe.

It was the second death from a fall at the lodge this month. John Pascoe, 90, died Nov. 7 after he plunged out of a third-floor window. An inquest into his death resumes tonight.

While administrator Maxine Marcotte told the jury windows in rooms of residents suspected of having suicidal tendencies were pegged so they could not be opened more than six inches, that wasn't done in the case of Mrs. Lock.

Nursing director Penelope Armstrong explained that Mrs. Lock had not shown any recent tendencies to suicide and appeared to be a little more cheerful since surgery in September to correct a bowel deficiency.

Victoria police Sgt. Fred Mills, however, pointed out that the lodge file on Mrs. Lock indicated the woman had attempted suicide in the past and was prone to depression.

Her physician, Dr. James Houston, testified he had treated her for depression since 1943 and the bouts had worsened over the years after the deaths of her husband and daughter and an automobile accident.

She had been admitted twice for mental therapy after taking overdoses of aspirin and in 1973 was discharged from hospital directly to the James Bay Lodge where she remained until her death.

Pathologist Dr. John Marsden said Mrs. Lock suffered multiple rib and back fractures and a torn aorta, injuries that were consistent with a fall from such a height.

Nurse's aide Julie Gravells testified she checked Mrs. Lock's room at 1 a.m., then went to assist on another floor and when she returned for another check at 3 a.m., Mrs. Lock was missing.

Searchers found her body on the ground below her window.

Marcotte said that since the incident, all windows in the lodge have been pegged at a maximum opening of six inches. Previously the opening was 12 inches.

24 Delta policemen get knuckles rapped

By JAKE BANKY

The B.C. Police Commission inquiry into the Delta police force has resulted in one out of every four Delta policemen receiving some form of reprimand.

A final supplementary report on the inquiry released in Victoria reveals that 24 of the 92 members of the force were "advised as to their future conduct."

Mayor Ernie Burnett said Tuesday there are still several matters under investigation by the RCMP which could lead to further criminal charges being laid.

Two policemen have already been charged with assault and are under suspension.

The inquiry also led to the resignation of the police chief and deputy chief.

The final report carries a stronger condemnation of the force in Delta than the interim report released two weeks ago.

According to the final report, the 60 complaints investigated by the police commission covered such matters as use of excessive force, disrespectful behavior, neglect of duty, conflict of interest and poor management.

The report pays particular attention to conflicts of interest arising out of policemen working on off-duty jobs.

It says the Delta police board must set down strict guidelines forbidding moonlighting in situations where there is the slightest hint of a conflict of interest.

The report also deals with two fatal traffic accidents, one involving a police car, the other involving the daughter of a Delta police staff sergeant.

The inquiry found that in both cases the police investigation was adequate, and it was the decision of Crown counsel not to lay charges.

When the interim report was released, three pages were held back because they dealt with incidents still under investigation.

Delta council is standing by the decision to keep that material confidential until RCMP investigations are completed.

Royal pulling out of auto insurance

VANCOUVER (UPC) — The Royal Insurance Co. of Canada, B.C.'s largest insurance company, said Tuesday it was withdrawing from the personal automobile insurance field in the province.

Fred King, the company's B.C. branch manager, said Royal's 300 independent agents in B.C. had been instructed not to accept new automobile policy renewals after the end of November.

King said the company had written about 55,000 auto insurance policies this year.

The decision followed Royal's announcement last month that it was considering the withdrawal because the "flat-rating policy announced by the government-operated ICBC had made it virtually impossible for full and fair competition for automobile insurance to exist in B.C."

The Insurance Corp. of British Columbia announced in August that, in 1980, it would eliminate discrimination in insurance rates based on age, marital status, and geographic location.

Power output claim out of context: Kempf

The chairman of the legislature's Crown corporations reporting committee is annoyed about the leak of an energy report prepared for it.

Jack Kempf said Tuesday it is merely an in-house report designed to "stimulate the thoughts" of the committee.

Kempf said the report must have been leaked by a committee member and he added: "That really concerns me because any member realizes it is not for release to the public until the full committee has a chance to consider whether they want it released."

The two-volume report expresses concern that B.C. Hydro may be deliberately overestimating the province's future electricity demands in order to justify early construction of new power projects which really are designed to supply the U.S. market.

The report says B.C. Hydro will within five years have a surplus generating capacity greater than the total potential output of the giant Revelstoke Canyon dam now under construction

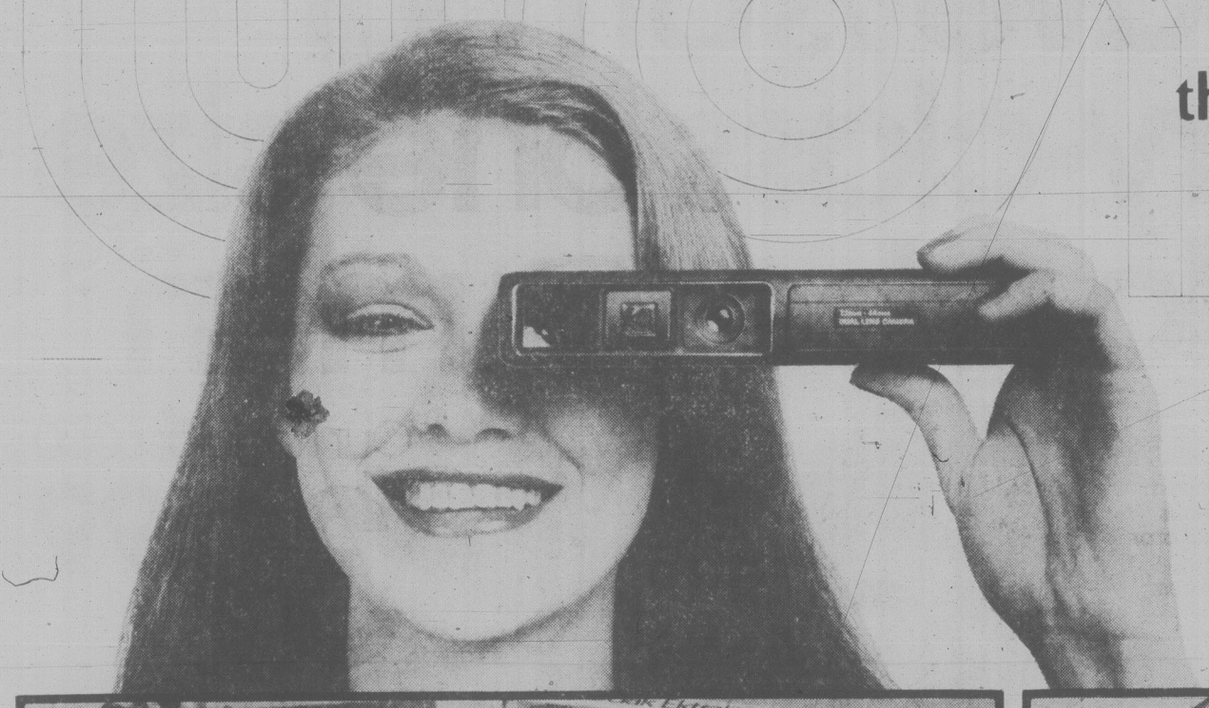

Kempf said, however, this interpretation takes the report completely out of context.

The committee meets in mid-December and Kempf said he expects the report will be released soon after.

But it will not be released in time to be presented to the Dec. 11 hearing of the National Energy Board in Vancouver, at which B.C. Hydro will apply for a licence to export up to 10 billion kilowatt hours of energy a year.

Turner is still the man who would be king

By CAROL GOAR
FP News Service

OTTAWA — Long before the days of Joe Clark, a supremely self-confident young woman living on a farm near Ottawa was plotting how she would topple the biggest giant on her political horizon — John Turner.

"I thought if we had a bilingual woman in her 30s, who could speak out on the issues affecting Ottawa-Carleton, John Tuner wouldn't have a snowball's hope in hell."

So said Maureen McTeer a decade ago.

Their paths never crossed — he left his riding to practise law in Toronto and she went to work for little-known Alberta backbencher Joe Clark.

But now it appears that the showdown of which McTeer once dreamed — in a far different guise than she fancied it — could be as little as months away.

And Turner remains as formidable a giant as ever.

Although he has not officially declared himself a candidate for the Liberal leadership race next March, the nation is waiting expectantly. His name is a household word. His face is instantly recognized and never from the front pages although he has been out of politics for four years.

Turner, an athletic 50, somehow manages to combine looking impressively distinguished and faintly mischievous. His handsome face alone seems enough to convince many voters he is the man to speak for Canada.

A senior lawyer at the Toronto firm of McMillan Binch, he has nine corporate directorships and a salary variously estimated by friends, critics and competitors between $180,000 and more than $300,000. He has a powerful network of young lawyers and riding organizers across the country eager to knock themselves out to get him the prime ministership.

Shortly after Pierre Trudeau resigned the Liberal leadership last week, Turner spokesmen privately let it be known that their man was ready to jump into the succession fray. But Turner himself drew back, saying he needed time to weigh the pros and cons.

It is easy — almost too easy — to draw parallels between this coyly reluctant national hero and Edward M. Kennedy, the larger-than-life Democrat who has injected a fairy-tale sparkle into the coming contest for the U.S. presidency.

Besides sharing a wide public following, good looks, a glamorous lifestyle and constant attention from the press, both men (should Turner decide to run) are in approximately the same political position. The immediate challenge is to overcome opposition from the inner circle of their own parties to win the leadership — and do it, if possible without dividing and damaging the party.

For Turner this will not be easy. Many key Liberals, both MPs and former Trudeau aides and supporters, have no desire to see the man who abruptly left the federal cabinet floundering by quitting his job as finance minister in 1975, come back in triumph to grab the top job.

One former cabinet minister recalled in a recent interview how Turner often used to slip out a back door in the middle of Question Period, on days when damaging economic statistics were released in Parliament. Beleaguered cabinet colleagues were left struggling to handle the inevitable onslaught of press inquiries.

"And the rumor was that he used to nip up to Jack Horner's office for a quick one," the MP added.

A Toronto MP said it was common knowledge that Turner used to keep an enemies' list. The Liberals were never sure who was on it, but the question made for a good deal of unhappy speculation.

Veteran parliamentarian Tommy Douglas of the New Democratic Party remembers the day of Turner's resignation from cabinet: Sept. 11, 1975.

"Some of the Liberals were livid. A few vowed they would never speak to him and, as far as I know, they haven't."

From his elegant law office on the Toronto lakeshore, he lost more of his Ottawa friends last year when it was disclosed that he and another lawyer were making close to $300,000 selling a confidential newsletter on the economy to carefully-selected corporate clients.

Two issues of the commentary surfaced publicly.

The first spoke of then-finance minister Jean Chretien's "growing credibility gap." Realizing the trouble that could ensue, Turner wrote to Chretien and apologized for the personal slight. Three months later, however, in his next newsletter, he said the government had failed to put its fiscal house in order and Chretien was losing leverage in government circles.

He accused Trudeau of destroying the credibility of his cabinet and the morale of the public service with his unilateral policy drive toward restraint.

Complaints were muted, but they were there and the hurt ran deep.

Douglas says Turner knew exactly what he was doing and knew how far he could afford to go. "I'm not saying the Liberals will welcome him with open arms, but they need a winner and what choice have they got?"

People have not forgotten Turner's bold bid for the party leadership in 1968. He finished third, but came out of the contest with a tightly-knit group of stalwarts.

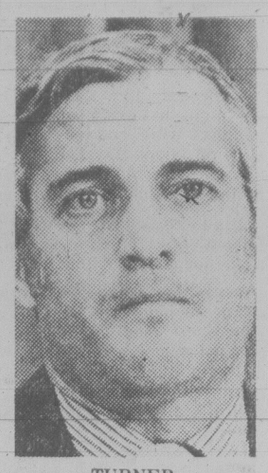

His career has touched almost every possible base for a Canadian politician. He went to school at Ottawa's exclusive Ashbury College, studied at the University of British Columbia, Oxford and the University of Paris. He is fluently bilingual. He hired, as an executive assistant, young Lloyd Axworthy, now the only sitting Liberal from Manitoba.

Turner's most recent public appearance was at the Liberal Party's Ontario policy convention in Toronto a week ago. He arrived Saturday afternoon — true to form — the epitome of effortless fashion. His grey flannels were pressed impeccably. His striped plum-colored shirt matched his tie. His jacket was tweed.

Sharp-eyed observers noticed one curious incongruity, however. He had on scurfed brown suede shoes.

Reporters noticed those same beat up shoes in 1974 when Turner was out handshaking.

"My campaign shoes, man," he said.

TURNER

Countdown on for Turner bid

MONTREAL (CP) — A friend of John Turner's indicated Tuesday the former finance minister may pick early next week to launch his campaign to succeed Pierre Trudeau as Liberal leader.

Roland Comtois, MP for Terrebonne and a member of Turner's 1968 leadership campaign, said it is "still too early for most members of Parliament to commit themselves openly" and declined to comment on a report naming him as a member of Turner's new campaign organization.

But he acknowledged that "people who know me might suppose I'll be supporting Mr. Turner."

He predicted candidates and MPs will start declaring themselves next week.

La Presse said Tuesday that Turner's organization in Quebec is headed by former solicitor-general Jean-Pierre Goyer. It also said Raymond Garneau, a former Quebec finance minister who lost a provincial Liberal leadership bid last year to Claude Ryan, is considering joining.

'Nice-guy' Macdonald an indifferent heir

MACDONALD

By MARY JANIGAN
FP News Serviee

OTTAWA — By accident or design, he's becoming the reluctant candidate. He does not revel in power. He figures that he's absolutely devoid of political charisma. And he loathes the infringement of public business in that special private world of his family.

So some in the backrooms of the Liberal Party are using an unusual carrot to coax Donald Macdonald out of his Toronto law practice and back into the limelight in time for the Liberal Party leadership convention this March: They're telling him that his party needs him and that Liberalism will wither without his support.

Macdonald is not a cynic. He's a Baptist — famous for his wit and his hard work and his massive size and his rare outbursts of temper. The Liberal caucus unabashedly likes him. The Liberal rank and file like him. The Pierre Trudeau loyalists like him. Even potential political opponents like him.

Some wonder, however, if liking is enough. They wonder if he can sweep his party and then the nation without a dollop of that famed Trudeau "royal jelly". He's been viewed as a loyal Liberal supporter all his life — rarely, if ever, as a leader. If passion fuels politics and glitter animates leaders, then Macdonald fails. Few would denounce him. Few would rush zealously to the polls for him.

And there's the rub. So Donald Stoevel Macdonald is holed up in Toronto, pondering if he should disrupt his life and run for Trudeau's crown and questioning whether his presence will really help his beleaguered party.

A Liberal backroom source says that Macdonald feels that the party rank and file may crave former finance minister John Turner's star quality as the ticket back into power. He says that winning is everything to a party out of power everywhere in Canada. And he says that Macdonald will simply withdraw if the average Liberal ignores his support from the party brass and opts for Turner's charisma.

And that all adds up to an unlikely position for one of the two top contenders for the Trudeau crown in a field which will likely be crowded with aspiring but low-profile former cabinet ministers.

He was born in Ottawa 47 years ago. With scholarships he sailed through Trinity College at the University of Toronto, Osgoode Law School and Harvard University for a master of law degree. In 1956, he used a fellowship to snare a diploma in international law at Cambridge.

He launched his corporate law practice in 1957 with the Toronto firm of McCarthy and McCarthy. In 1961 he married a former investment dealer, Ruth Hutchison. And by June, 1962, he was well enough established at 30 to run as the throwaway Liberal candidate against Diefenbaker's public works minister David Walker in posh Rosedale riding.

To his shock, he won. And for the next six years — until Trudeau's ascension — he languished on the backbenches with an assortment of assignments as a parliamentary secretary.

Through the late sixties he was minister without portfolio, acting justice minister and House leader. In the early 1970s he was defence minister. And in January, 1972, Trudeau steered him into the energy department hotseat for the final months of that rocky minority Parliament.

By September, 1975, Macdonald had it made. He's piloted Canada through the energy crisis of 1973, the imposition of the oil export tax, the subsidy for Eastern consumers of imported oil, the limitations on oil exports, the rescue of Syncrude, the passage of the petroleum administration legislation and the creation of the energy corporation Petro-Canada.

He was "Big Mac," the darling of the press, a caucus favorite and the idol of most of his civil servants and aides.

And he wanted to be out of it all. Badly. His wife had undergone a serious cancer operation that spring and Macdonald longed to spend more time with her and their four young daughters. He toyed with quitting in the summer of 1975 but shelved the notion temporarily as his wife recovered.

Then John Turner left. The finance portfolio was open. Macdonald was the only logical successor. Trudeau insisted. Macdonald relented. And he was caught back into the whirlwind of politics in a portfolio which held little room for manoeuvre until his retirement from cabinet in late 1977.

In spring, 1978, he left the Commons, citing Shakespeare's Macbeth: "Nothing in his life became hime like the leaving it."

And he left behind a formidable legacy.

Toronto MP Peter Stollery recalls that Macdonald helped save land destined for the local waterfront park from being bulldozed into a soccer field. He remembers his wit and his loyalty and "how he always had time and how he always came through". And he has never forgotten the sight of Macdonald parrying Commons questions while he revelled in the poems of W.H. Auden.

Fewer back conversion to metrics

MONTREAL (CP) — A Gallup poll indicates that more Canadians — 52 per cent — disagree with the conversion to the metric system than did in 1977 — 49 per cent.

Opposition comes mainly from Canadians over 50, who were 67 per cent against, compared with those 18 to 29, who were 57 per cent for.

It also notes that the higher the level of education the respondant had, the more positively he or she regards the metric system.

The poll was based on 1,038 personal, in-home interviews, conducted in October.

Bartenders beware

EAST BERLIN (Reuter) — East German bartenders who allow their customers to drink themselves to death can be charged with manslaughter. The monthly Neue Justiz legal review has cited the case of a barman who obeyed a customer's order for a beer-mug full of schnaps after the man had already drunk the equivalent of 20 glasses of the spirit and six beers. The customer died of alcohol poisoning. The bartender was convicted of manslaughter and given a two-year suspended jail term.

TWO ARMED MEN who sought asylum at the Canadian ambassador's residence in the Chilean capitol of Santiago talk to reporters through the fence before giving up to police today after their request was rejected. Ambassador Glen Buick was absent when the men, Gustavo Cornejo Pavez, left, and Reinaldo Mallea Avarez, vaulted over the fence into the residence's front yard Tuesday, threatening to commit suicide if not granted asylum. The men said they were being hunted by police in connection with an unsuccessful armored car holdup attempt Saturday in Santiago in which a policeman was killed.

Rebels set terms

LONDON (Reuter) — Patriotic Front guerrillas set tough conditions on Tuesday for a ceasefire in the bush war in Zimbabwe Rhodesia, including the disarming of all white civilians and army reservists.

Their demands, including a criticism of Australia and New Zealand as monitors of a ceasefire, were described in a surprise document introduced as peace talks in London entered their 12th week.

In many respects, they differed substantially from ceasefire proposals put forward by Britain. Britain is chairing the conference in an attempt to return its breakaway colony to legal status.

The other party to the talks, Bishop Abel Muzorewa's bi-racial government, said on Monday that it accepted the ceasefire plan of Britain.

But the Patriotic Front counter-proposals written by its leaders, Robert Mugabe and Joshua Nkomo, appeared to lengthen the negotiating process.

The ceasefire is the last stage of the conference. Agreement has been reached for the first time on elections involving the Patriotic Front.

Sharing the Canadiana

He writes, and talks!

Allan Anderson has just had his fourth book published and when he talks about it you wonder how he ever got the job finished.

In an interview he rattled on like a machine gun about the 100-plus nautical characters whose tales he taped for his book Salt Water, Fresh Water.

He talked — almost non-stop — about fishermen, divers, whalers, tugboat skippers and others he'd met during the five months he roamed Canada with his tape recorder, savoring the marrow of men who go down to the sea.

Among the vignettes in Anderson's book is one on Capt. Frank Gavin of the Pacific Rescue Co-ordination Centre. Gavin tells of the time search and rescue specialists jumped into the ocean from a Buffalo aircraft, armed with knives in their teeth for protection against sharks.

They had been assigned to rescue two fishermen who had been in their sunken troller's liferaft for three days, and the rescuers wanted a fighting chance if they came face to face with jaws.

By PAT DUFOUR

Anderson also recalled his interview with Capt. Mark Goostrey and Douglas Johnston shortly before the flight of their Airwest twin-engined Otter that plummeted into Vancouver harbor in September last year, killing them and nine of their Japanese passengers.

They had discussed casually what it's like to "ferry" passengers across water day in and day out. He said he could hardly believe hours later that they were dead.

How did Anderson get started on the book? It's quite simple. He says he is a gregarious Canadian driven by an urge to share his love of modern Canadiana.

He was raised in Calgary and now lives on a hilltop in Tottenham, Ont., on 4½ acres and a farmhouse that he bought for $6,000 in 1949.

He swears he can see Saskatoon from his hilltop.

He's been a freelancer all his life. He studied journalism in Montreal and remembers Stephen Leacock as one of his most inspiring mentors. He says he would never be a newspaper reporter, because he isn't prepared to get up at 7 a.m. and put in regular hours.

Instead, he stayed with his freelance writing and broadcasting for the CBC for 30 years. He did an hour-long show on Victoria 10 years ago.

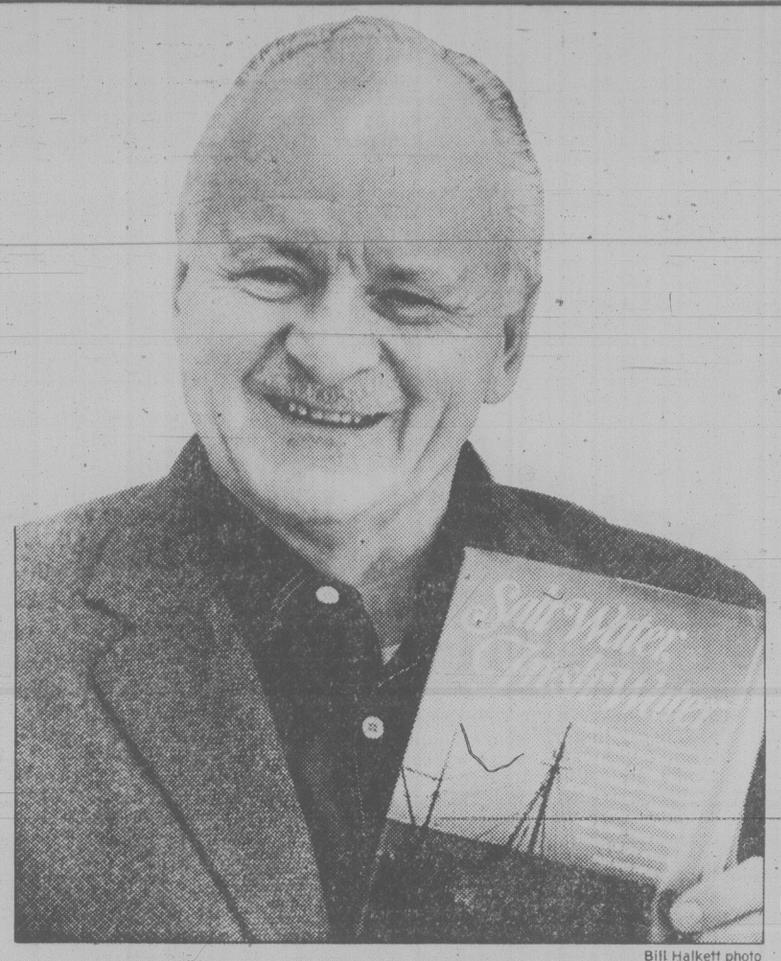

Four years ago, when he was 60, he decided to write his first book Remembering the Farm.

Having met so many people who make their living from the soil, Anderson says he felt impelled to catch the spirit of men who make the sea their business.

His father was a maritimer, born in Chatham, N.B., and the landlocked Anderson has never forgotten the salty tales told him by his father.

Now, those tales have been brought up to date by those he writes about in his book. And, while he is fascinated by the lusty lives of mariners, he is candid when asked if he yearns to become waterborne.

"Like the fishermen, I respect the seas," he says, "But to face some of the things they do — I'd be scared . . . witless."

When you extend your neck across the chopping block of life you can expect that someone will gladly take a swing.

I didn't have to wait long after my column on the Iran situation appeared last Wednesday before a woman with an unmistakably American voice phoned.

Giving her name simply as Mrs. Ritchie, the woman said she had lived here 11 years (after moving from the States) and found my column "so full of hate" she couldn't believe it.

I prefer to think it was logic and an attempt at objectivity rather than hate but Mrs. Ritchie said she always dismisses such "attacks on America" as sour grapes. The people who have more money are the ones who are criticized, she explained.

"Your column is tops in pure vitriol!" Mrs. R added angrily.

It would seem I don't have the market cornered on vitriol, though, as my caller went on to lash out at Canadians. All Canadians should get rid of their insane, childish jealousy of Americans, she said.

"Canadians are so often eaten up by envy and they take it out on Americans to whom they refer as 'our neighbors to the south.'

"What's wrong with saying 'Americans?' Are they afraid of it? By saying 'our neighbors to the south' Canadians are doing something mean, petty and hateful."

And Mrs. Ritchie wound up her telephone onslaught by saying that Americans are always being criticized for their lifestyles but Canadians should definitely take a look at their own lifestyles.

With any controversial subject, of course, you hear from both sides. As well as Gorde Hunter and the other "members of Uncle Sam's family" up here, there are some who feel Canada should be able to stand on its own feet, have its own identity and put across audibly its own beliefs, instead of bleating in unison with "our neighbors to the south."

"I did so enjoy your column on the Iranian situation," reader Bette Morrison, who said she once lived in the States for more than four years, said in a letter.

"I feel Canada should not be taking sides in this situation but trying to be as objective as possible. Columns like yours certainly help."

"You touched upon the most controversial issue of our day, and I thought your points were made tellingly," wrote Robin Carlsen.

"There is an immense kind of ego involvement on the part of the Americans — and to a lesser extent ourselves — to not give in to the Iranian demands, or even to admit the support for the Shah was a dubious venture," Carlsen said. "The irrational and violent reaction in the media — the U.S. is absolutely right, the Iranian students are bloodthirsty, their leader is a lunatic — will eventually give way, as the facts become more clear, to a more balanced and more difficult response.

"There is some pride, some unquestioned assumptions the U.S. has about their policies and behavior towards the world," Carlsen went on. "In this case what riles them most is the fanatical integrity of the students, the scorn of the Ayatollah for all their political threats and manipulation.

"Somewhere the Americans need to be taught a lesson and I believe fate has really dished it out to them this time. The very indiscriminate — becoming more objective now — reporting of this event in the press and television was alarming enough: The consciousness of the U.S. just couldn't be more disturbed or crudely attacked.

"The likelihood of Iran backing down, however, is remote and what will be interesting is when America is sobered up enough to examine some different set of options than the ones they are now prepared to consider. International law is based on some idea of universal law.

"What the Shah did — even what the U.S. did to support him — may constitute a much more intrinsically violent act of crime than the taking over of the embassy."

Saying "that was a gentle and refreshing wave of wisdom that came in your column," Carlsen predicted "we'll see some surprises coming up — that Allah is indeed a little more subtle and innocent than the U.S. State Department. Not that I should like to submit to Koranic law, but I do believe the Americans are quite deceived in their moral righteousness in this matter, to their own peril."

Pierre Trudeau has said Canada should do more toward ending the stalemate in Iran. I agree.

While not going as far as saying that any blow against America is a blow against us (because we are such good buddies), I believe Canada, along with all other nations which profess to love peace, should make it known — and loudly — that we abhor this act of terrorism.

That we are concerned, not just for the safety of the 49 hostages but for all mankind, lest this be the first of many such incidents that make a mockery of worldwide diplomatic procedure and render embassies perilous places in which to work.

'Juvenile motel' escapes frustrate police: Gregory

By NORMAN GIDNEY

A juvenile serving a two-year sentence at the Juvenile Detention Home for attempted murder has escaped twice from the Pembroke Street facility, Chief Jack Gregory said today.

He told the police board that on the night of Oct. 22 there were several escapes from the supposedly secure building and four incidents of breaking and entering were reported in the Fernwood neighborhood.

The JDH continues to be a frustrating security problem for Victoria police despite the provincial government's recent $250,000 renovation of the building, he said.

Keeping a juvenile for a two-year sentence would seem to contravene the terms of the province's lease with the four core municipalities who own the building. It states that the JDH is to be used only as a remand centre, or for juveniles who have been to court and are awaiting assignment to some other institution.

No one is supposed to stay there longer than 30 days without the written permission of the municipalities' family court committee.

"These are the things that are frustrating to the police," said the chief.

"It's not a containment centre. It's not containing them."

It's common for the JDH staff to call the city police to ask them to remove obstreperous individuals who can't be controlled, said Gregory. This is time-consuming as police must first get a judge's permission.

GREGORY
. . . 'they break doors'

When asked how secure the home was, Gregory replied:

"They do have doors and they do have windows, but they break the doors and they break the windows."

Mayor Mike Young said no definition of the JDH's function has been established by the province.

"Is it a containment centre? Is it a remand centre or is it a place where juveniles who are in the process of readapting to society are to be housed?"

If it's supposed to be a containment centre, it's not fulfilling that purpose, said Young.

Board member Janet Baird suggested the JDH is really no more than "a juvenile motel" while Young added: "It's more like a community foster tank."

The mayor told the board that Victoria is balking at selling the JDH to the provincial government because of concerns over who is to be housed there. Although the province does not yet own the building, it recently announced plans to keep 20 juveniles there, 10 beds for those awaiting remand to trial in family court and 10 for youths actually serving sentences.

Jetfoil next? Not so — Fraser

The provincial government is not considering a jetfoil service to replace the Princess Marguerite on the Victoria-Seattle run.

Transportation Minister Alex Fraser said today he has no idea where the suggestion came from.

The minister said the government has never at any time said it would use a jetfoil service.

"What we have said is that we will keep the run going with another vessel — that's all we intend to do."

Fraser said recommendations on a replacement for the Marguerite are now ready to go before cabinet and an announcement could be made Monday.

The minister's comments came after Boeing spokesman Robin Little of Seattle said he was given a polite hearing Tuesday at a meeting with government officials on a jetfoil service but no definite answer.

He said if the government decides in favor of a jetfoil service, it could either run it through the B.C. Steamship Co., which operated the Marguerite, or let private enterprise do it.

Former Socred cabinet minister Sam Bawlf — who investigated the jetfoil concept while in office — said today if the government wants private enterprise to operate such a service he would be interested in discussing it.

Pilot didn't have rating on instruments: lawyer

By DEREK SIDENIUS

The pilot of a light plane that got lost in poor weather and crashed near Powell River Oct. 14 was not qualified to fly in such weather conditions, a coroner's jury was told today.

Donald Stanley Moe was rated to fly visual flight rules only, a four-man, one-woman jury was told.

Yet weather that day was such that flyers had to be experienced with instrument navigation.

Moe, 37, and two passengers, Mary Ellen Kingsfield, 34, and Valerie Lynn Wuerch, 17, all of Victoria, were killed in the mid-morning crash that occurred at the 5,400-foot elevation of an unnamed mountain 18 miles east of Powell River.

They were flying to Powell River with another plane piloted by Phil Esnouf, a Victoria architect, with three passengers.

All seven were headed for Campbell River for the inaugural service of a new Church of the Way.

The inquest is being conducted by Wilfred Carpenter, a Vancouver coroner.

In his opening remarks to the jury Brian Bastin, a Vancouver lawyer representing the coroner, said evidence given would show the two planes encountered bad weather in which an instrument rating would be required by a pilot.

But he said evidence would show Moe had no such rating.

John Addison, chief flying instructor at Victoria Flying Club, said Moe had been his student for three months between November 1977 and January 1978.

He said Moe, who had 180 hours flying time, was training to become a commercial pilot but dropped out of the program.

Moe had an average ability but in his commercial flying training was below average, he said.

Our minuses are plus

By DEREK SIDENIUS

Vancouverites find Victoria has a lot less to offer — less traffic, less hassle and less of the frenetic bustle that exists in their sprawling city.

There's another plus minus — it's less expensive for the Vancouverites who come here — about 2½ per cent less.

That's one of the findings of a trio of fourth-year University of Victoria economic students who completed a price survey of the two cities this summer.

The students, Douglas Helmcken, Clyde Moore and Shaun Wedick, compared a basket of 213 goods and services that could be purchased in both cities.

They found that for every $100 a Vancouverite spends in his city, he could stretch his dollar slightly further here, spending about $97.50 for the same items.

The greatest price differences were in housing, transportation, and a category lumping reading, recreation and education.

In their summary the students said average rents contributed most to making the Vancouver housing index (100) greater than Victoria's index (96).

Vancouver had higher insurance rates and parking fees which more than offset the higher taxi fares and gas prices in Victoria.

The reading, recreation and education component was lower in Victoria because Vancouver cablevision rates and hotel accommodation were higher.

There was hardly any difference in the four other components surveyed — food, clothing, health and personal care and tobacco and alcohol.

The survey, funded by the provincial ministry of labor and supervised by UVic economics professor Dr. Colin Jones, was carried out in July.

It was not designed to analyse price changes or relative prices over time and in that regard differed from the consumer price index or CPI, the standard measurement of living costs across the country.

The goods included in the survey, however, were based on a list of items used by Stats Canada in generating the CPI.

Q. Back in the years 1925 to 1929 there were many lay preachers and religious women travelling central Alberta. They called themselves Cannanites and were very generally called Two-by-Twos because they travelled in pairs. They carried no money, food or spare clothing but went from house to house, living off the bounty of the land. Do these people still work in Alberta or other provinces of Canada? Where can I get any information on their sect? Do they have a head church or office here in Canada? L.A.P.

Five power-play goals key to Cougars victory

By ERNIE FEDORUK

Victoria Cougars, good on the ice, were kind to coach Jack Shupe Tuesday night.

He was "never really worried" in a Western Hockey League game that could have been an ulcer-aggravating experience.

But the Cougars, coming up with a superb over-all performance, took command from the opening whistle and skated to an impressive 6-2 victory over Regina Pats before 2,547 fans.

The Cougars did it up right. They skated strongly, looked alert in their own zone, killed penalties smartly, stung the Pats badly during their shorthanded situations, and bodychecked.

Five of the six Victoria goals came from power-play opportunities.

Pats managed one goal while the Cougars played shorthanded but Regina, coming into Victoria with the WHL's most proficient power-play, couldn't do it again although they had eight other manpower advantages.

Despite Regina's two goals, Cougars played "probably our best game in our own end" this season, according to Shupe.

Equally impressive was Victoria's bodywork.

Both Cougar forwards and defencemen hit hard and often and that might have spelled the ultimate difference in a matchup of two teams that provided some of the best 60 minutes of action in Memorial Arena this season.

Despite the four-goal spread, Shupe came away with a good impression of the Regina team that is challenging for the Eastern Division lead.

"I'm impressed with Regina," he admitted.

But he also was impressed with his charges.

"They had it in control all the way," he said. "I was never worried, even when the score was 1-1. It was one of those games that I knew we would win."

On another day, things could change. The Pats played their fifth game in six days, and without Ron Flockhart, a forward who had been providing great leadership until injured recently.

Tuesday, however, it was Cougars' night to howl.

Grant Fuhr topped it with strong backing in goal, including a stop against Doug Wickenheiser when the league's leading goal-scorer broke away for a clear run.

Wickenheiser managed only one assist but it preserved his record of having scored a point in every game this season.

Bob Jansch, Bob Smith, Bud McCarthy, Brad Palmer, Mark Morrison and Mark Robinson shared Victoria's goals. McCarthy's goal was the only one Cougars scored while playing on even terms.

Mike Blaisdell, with his 21st goal in 15 games since joining Regina after leaving the University of Wisconsin, and Bill Ansell counted for the Pats.

Jansch, who has been turning it on for the Cougars in recent games, also picked up two assists, as did Greg Adams and Torrie Robertson. Barry Pederson, with three assists, was another Victoria standout.

Cougars had a field day at the expense of Regina defencemen Darren Veitch and Bud Langstrom. Langstrom was on the ice for all six Victoria goals while Vetich was on for five. Wickenheiser and Ansell both were on for three minus marks.

The only blot against the teams was their desire to settle a few grudges in the dying minutes. Referee Wayne Bonney called 94 minutes in penalties with 40 coming in the final four minutes when the game was obviously in Victoria's hands.

At Calgary, Glenn Merkosky scored three goals and Warren Skorodenski racked up the shutout as Calgary Wranglers padded their hold on the East lead with an 8-0 romp over Brandon Wheat Kings.

The win boosted Calgary three points ahead of Billings Bighorns, clipped 3-2 by Lethbridge Broncos, and four points ahead of the Pats.

The Bighorns out-shot Lethbridge 42-23 but dropped the home-ice decision.

Sabres nipping heels of front-running Bruins

By Canadian Press

Buffalo Sabres, under major Bruins' nemesis Scotty Bowman, are hot on the heels of Adams division-leading Boston today in the National Hockey League.

The Sabres built a 4-0 lead Tuesday night at Boston Garden and whipped the Bruins 5-2 to pull within two points of Boston.

The victory was the sixth in seven games for the Sabres and came in the busiest week of Buffalo's season so far.

"We came off two weekend games, and Boston came off a great game on Sunday," said Bowman, who regularly defeated Boston when he coached Montreal Canadiens. "We knew what they were doing this year. They're so strong in the first period, we tried to get through the first period.

"This is a very busy week for us. We've three games since Saturday. We play the Rangers Thursday and Atlanta in Atlanta Friday. Then we come home on Sunday. So, it's a six-game week."

Fred Creighton, the Bruins coach, noted his team's tough schedule, too.

"It could have been we were tired after three tough games in four nights," he said. "But we came back all right in the third period.

"There's different kinds of tired. There's tired in the head and tired in the body. We were a little flat in the first period. We gave one away early, and it gave them a lift. We made it tough on ourselves."

In other NHL games Tuesday, Montreal tied Detroit Red Wings 5-5, Toronto Maples Leafs defeated Atlanta Flames 5-3, St. Louis Blues beat Quebec Nordiques 4-2, Philadelphia Flyers dumped Harford Whalers 6-2 and Los Angeles Kings dropped Winnipeg Jets, 5-3.

Derek Smith put Buffalo in front in the second minute of play and Danny Gare added a second Buffalo goal midway in the first period. Craig Ramsay and Richard Martin added goals for the Sabres in the second period.

Rick Middleton spoiled Buffalo goalie Bob Sauve's bid for his third shutout of the season with a power play goal for the Bruins 24 seconds into the third period. John Wensink added a second Boston goal.

Gilbert Perrault scored an empty net goal for the Sabres with nine seconds left.

Guy Lafleur scored two goals and assisted on another as Montreal overcame a 4-0 Detroit lead to salvage a point. Peter Mahovlich, Vasclav Nedomanski, Mike Foligno and Dennis Polonich gave Detroit a big first-period lead.

But rookie galtender Richard Sevigny replaced Michel Larocque in the second period and Montreal caught fire. Lafleur scored in the second period and Rejean Houle and Pierre Larouche made it 4-3 early in the third. Nedomansky got a second goal but Lafleur replied at 17:20 and Serge Savard tied the game 40 seconds later.

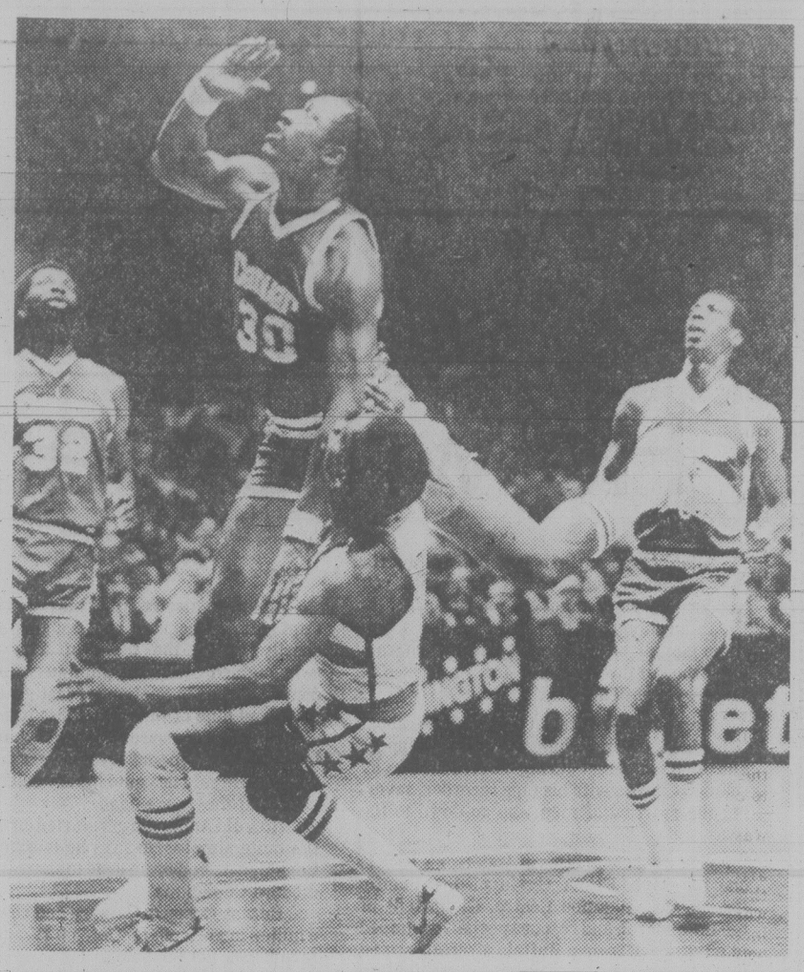

Philadelphia stretched its winning streak to 18 games and Reggie Leach scored twice to run his total to 17 goals during the streak. Mike Busniuk, Denis Ververgaert, Norm Barnes and rookie Brian Propp got the other Flyers goals.

Boxer still 'critical'

NEW YORK (AP) — Middleweight boxer Willie Classen remained in critical condition today at Bellevue Hospital following brain surgery for injuries suffered in his fight last Friday night against Wilford Scypion.

Classen, 29, was knocked over the bottom strand of the ring ropes 12 seconds into the 10th round of the fight at Madison Square Garden's Felt Forum. The boxer suffered a brain hemmorhage and surgeons performed a 2½-hour operation on him early Saturday.

CHARGING toward basket, George McGinnis of Denver Nuggets bowls over Kevin Porter of Washington Bullets during opening stages of National Basketball Association game Tuesday at Landover, Md. McGinnis, who scored basket and escaped foul call on this play, collected 12 points and earned career-high 12 assists as Nuggets tripped Bullets 96-91. McGinnis also boosted career point total past 15,000 mark for his nine years in NBA.

Adrian's best-ever couldn't save Jazz

By Canadian Press

Frustrated, Adrian?

After scoring a career-high 50 points before the largest home crowd of the season in Salt Lake City, Adrian Dantley should have had reason to smile Tuesday night.

But he didn't — his team lost, again.

Despite Dantley's scoring touch, Utah Jazz dropped a 122-118 National Basketball Association decision to Los Angeles Lakers.

The Jazz stayed with the Lakers to the final minute but could not quite come through for the 11,673 spectators who turned out.

It was the 14th straight loss for the Jazz, who have the worst record in the NBA at two wins and 19 losses. Los Angeles improved its record to 16-8 to create a logjam atop the Pacific Division where the Lakers, Portland and Phoenix all have 16-8 records.

Jamaal Wilkes scored 29 points to lead the Lakers, Kareem Abdul-Jabbar had 28 and Norm Nixon added 24. For Utah, Ben Poquette had 20 and Ron Boone 15.

Dantley scored 24 the first half and 26 the final two quarters, for the highest individual scoring effort of any NBA player so far this season.

Jabbar pulled it out for the Lakers, picking up six points from the foul line the final 30 seconds to nullify five last-ditch points by Poquette.

Elsewhere, Atlanta drubbed San Antonio 143-120, New Jersey defeated Milwaukee 118-93, Kansas City shaded Houston 117-115, Denver edged Washington 96-91, New York Knicks downed Detroit Pistons 116-114 in overtime and San Diego defeated Chicago 128-103.

Mike Newlin poured in 34 points to help New Jersey break a four-game losing streak in Milwaukee.

Phil Ford's 16-foot jump shot with five seconds left enabled Kansas City to nip Houston.

Denver, winner of three of four games since moving David Thompson up to forward, won on the road as Thompson netted 17 points. George McGinnis also gave the Nuggets an unexpected boost when he passed off a career-high 12 assists in addition to scoring 12 points and leading all rebounders with 16. McGinnis' scoring total pushed him over the 15,000-point mark for his nine-year pro career. Bobby Dandridge had 29 points and Elvin Hayes 25 for Washington.

Playland invaders include Swedish rink

Top western curlers set to clash

By BILL WALKER

Victoria finds out this weekend if it is a curling town or not.

The reasoning is simple enough.

Most of the West's top curlers are here for the inaugural VI 90/New Dominion Hotel Curling Classic at Playland Curling Club.

And this is the biggest event of its kind ever to be held here.

In terms of real, hard cash, it is a $25,800 event with a top prize of $10,000 plus $1,600 for rink sponsors.

So, if curling's your game, this is it.

A full list of skips will come later, but for starters, toss these names around:

Ron Northcott, Paul Gowsell, Ed Lukowich, Don Barcome, Glen Pierce, Rick Folk, Bernie Sparkes, George Fink, Carl Folke.

Northcott is a four-time Canadian and world champion.

Gowsell is the all-time cashpiel money champ, a two-time world junior champion and his rink already has won a $10,000 cashspiel this year.

Barcome is the current world junior champion and hails from Grand Forks, North Dakota.

Sparkes was a second for Northcott in his championship years and has been in nine Briers.

Lukowich won the 1978 Canadian championship at Vancouver.

Folk has won the Saskatchewan championship the last two years.

Pierce won the B.C. championship last year.

Fink's rink captured the four cars that were the top prize at Vernon.

Folke? He's the international entry and skip of a Swedish rink from Stockholm.

Unfortunately, Canadian champion Barry Fry of Winnipeg couldn't make it and neither could his replacement, Doug Harrison, finalist in the '78 Brier. Harrison is competing in Scotland.

However, one of B.C.'s best has drawn in. He is Barry McPhee of Kamloops, a qualifier in the cashspiel at Kamloops this year and a finalist in the B.C. Curling Association playoffs last year.

Registration was taking place at Playland today with the curlers' draw scheduled for 11 p.m. tonight.

First draw Thursday is 9:30 a.m. with opening ceremonies set for 12:45 p.m.

Other draws Thursday are at 1:00, 4:30 and 8 p.m.

Draw times Friday are 11:00 a.m. and 2:30 and 8:00 p.m. and Saturday, 9:30 a.m., 1:00, 4:30 and 8:00 p.m.

Championship rounds take place Sunday at 8:30 a.m., 12 noon and 3:30 p.m.

Prize presentation will take place immediately following the 3:30 p.m. draw Sunday and the award list reads like this:

$10,000 for first; $6,000 for second;

$3,000 for third; $2,000 for fourth;

$1,200 for losing quarter-finalists.

In addition, a seafood bonanza supper will be held for curlers, wives, sponsors and tournament officials, Friday at 6 p.m. while a dance, open to everyone, will take place Friday at 10 p.m. Fishing charters also will be available.

Les Brice is general tournament chairman, Rob Cummings, hospitality; Frank Gibbins, salmon charters; Fred Zacek, transportation; Glen Harper, rules; and Joyce Perry, draw.

Tea Men moving to Rhode Island

PROVIDENCE (AP) — The Tea Men of the North American Soccer League say they are unable to agree on a plan that would have them play in Massachusetts, so are moving the New England franchise to Rhode Island.

General manager Robert Kweating said the team is looking at three possible playing sites in Rhode Island — Brown University's football field, McCoy Stadium in Pawtucket, and the stadium at the University of Rhode Island at Kingston.

Keating said that team officials had three meetings with Massachusetts Gov. Edward King and a day-long meeting with the Massachusetts Racing Commission, but were unable to agree on a plan that would allow the Tea Men to play at Schaefer Stadium in Foxboro, Mass., home of New England Patriots of the National Football League.

The Tea Men played at Foxboro in their first year, but were forced to play at Boston University field last year because Foxboro Raceway refused to let them play nights at Schaefer when it conflicted with harness racing.

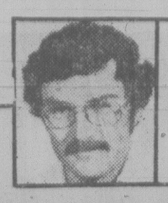

O.J. Simpson 'player of decade'

NEW YORK (AP) — O. J. Simpson of San Francisco '49ers, who rushed for more than 1,000 yards four times during his superstar seasons with Buffalo Bills, has been named the National Football League Player of the Decade by Pro Football Monthly.

The 32-year-old running back, who owns the NFL's single-season rushing record of 2,003 yards, set in 1973, beat out quarterbacks Terry Bradshaw of Pittsburgh Steelers, Roger Staubach of Dallas Cowboys and Ken Stabler of Oakland Raiders as the top player of the 1970s.

Simpson, runnerup to former Cleveland Browns great Jim Brown in career rushing with 11,189 yards (Brown gained 12,312), played for the Bills from 1969-1977 before being traded to the '49ers. He is expected to retire after the 1979 season.

Pro Football Monthly also named the 1972 Miami Dolphins as the Team of the Decade.

Riley Creek situation calls for firm action

I hate to say I told you so, but . . .

A total of eight slides occurred near Riley Creek on Graham Island in the Queen Charlottes during the weekend — a predictable consequence of logging steep-sloped terrain with unstable soil conditions.

Now might be a good time for the federal fisheries department to take a firm stand and back their own Fisheries Act.

Earlier this year, the watershed near Rennell Sound was the site of a dispute between federal fisheries and the B.C. forest service.

A total of 16 loggers and Q.C. Timber Ltd. of Vancouver were charged with endangering fish habitat by increasing the risk of sedimentation in the spawning area when they refused to cease operations.

The forest service contended there was no proof (despite scientific research to the contrary) that logging affected slope stability. Following threats by the International Woodworkers of America to "shut the province down" as well as some vocal opposition from Premier Bennett, federal fisheries dropped the charges and allowed logging to proceed with a few provisos.

Now, three or four years earlier than expected (the time it takes the root systems to rot away), sections of the area have slumped into the valley and increased sedimentation in Riley Creek.

While it isn't a pink spawning year up-coast, the sediment will likely wipe out fish production in the creek for quite some time.

Now, we're left with two burning questions.

Will federal fisheries re-open the question and charge those responsible for damaging fish habitat? It is, after all, a clear violation of the Fisheries Act.

And, how will this situation affect forestry planning for similar terrain on the remainder of the Queen Charlottes, especially on South Moresby Island?

The fate of South Moresby is now being decided. Logging activities have been frozen by a moratorium and the South Moresby Resource Planning Team, made up of representatives of government, industry and the public, is committed to "developing an overall land use strategy for the area as soon as possible."

The moratorium, which affects 12 hand-logging operations and a major proposal by Rayonier Canada (B.C.) Ltd., runs out March 31, 1980. The land use plan must be in place by that time.

Positional papers presented by the fish and wildlife branch and parks branch at the October SMRPT meeting call for preservation of large tracts of the area for environmental, aesthetic and recreational reasons. On the other side, the forest service is calling for some preservation while backing Rayonier's submission that logging be the major land use.

But, judging by reports filtering out of the meetings, some progress is being made toward keeping a fair portion of South Moresby in a natural state.

Meanwhile, we can all help play a part by backing the Islands Protection Society, which is seeking to preserve South Moresby.

The IPS is holding a raffle to raise funds. Tickets, selling for $2 each, will soon be available between 10 a.m. and 2 p.m. five days a week at the Sierra Club office, 536-A Yates Street.

All of the prizes are works donated by top Haida artists.

First prize is a cast silver pendant, valued at around $1,200, donated by Bill Reid.

Among the other prizes are a carved argillite pipe, a painted and carved canoe paddle and a copper bracelet.

The draw will be made March 22 in Queen Charlotte City.

NIBBLES: The Sierra Club, too, is in the process of raising funds through an auction starting at 7:30 p.m. Friday at the James Bay Community Centre, 140 Oswego Street.

A $1 donation at the door may be applied to any successful bid and refreshments will be available.

Victoria MLA Charles Barber will be the auctioneer.

Taiwan goes ahead with plans

TAIPEI, Taiwan (AP) — Shen Chia-Ming, president of Taiwan's Olympic Committee, said today that Taiwan would go ahead with plans to compete in the winter and summer Olympic Games regardless of a decision demanding that it use a new name, flag and anthem.

Meanwhile, Nationalist Chinese officials urged continued efforts against the International Olympic Committee's decision demanding the changes by Taiwan's Olympic competitors.

Taiwan already has announced it has filed a legal action against the IOC decision at a district court in Lausanne, Switzerland.

Foreign ministry spokesman King Shu-Chi said: "We advocate the idea of separating sports from politics, or there should be no political intervention in sports movements. However, we fully support the Republic of China National Olympic Committee's position to protect our national colors, anthem and name."

King declined to comment on Peking's overtures to compete hand-in-hand with Taiwan's athletes in the Olympic games and to exchange visits of sports teams and coaches between Taiwan and the mainland.

The English-language newspaper China News said in an editorial: "The surrender of sports to politics has been completed . . . by a vote of 62 to 17, the International Olympic Committee bowed to the Chinese Communists."

It added: "Peking will compete in the Winter Olympics at Lake Placid, N.Y, and the Summer games at Moscow next year under the name and flag of its choice . . . the Republic of China may compete only if it changes its name, flag and anthem. This is at the dictation of the Chinese Communists."

It urged Taiwan to resort to legal steps and every other resource to combat injustice for the sake of Taiwanese athletes.

"The Olympic Games have been wallowing in politics and professionalism for years now. Barring reforms for which selfish nations appear to have no stomach, the games will either fall apart or lose their prestige," the paper said.

Eskimos plan to get better

EDMONTON (CP) — Edmonton Eskimos of the Canadian Football League won 12 games and had two losses and two ties this year and beat Montreal Alouettes 17-9 in the Grey Cup game.

That gave the Eskimos a 32-12-4 record in the last three years, six appearances in the Grey Cup game in the last seven years and three Cup victories in the last four years.

That's been bad news for the Eskimos eight CFL opponents, but head coach Hugh Campbell has more bad news: "We'll be as better team next year."

Campbell has to be taken seriously. That's the same prediction he has made every year since he came to Edmonton in 1977 and directed the Eskimos to a 10-6 year and the Grey Cup game. Last year the Eskimos were 10-4-2.

"If I thought we weren't going to get better I'd be beside myself," Campbell said in an interview.

How do you improve on a team that set a CFL scoring record in 1978?

The Eskimos, Campbell said, won't stand pat.

"There will be some change and whatever ones we'll make will result in us being a better ball club. We've got a lot of things we can do to improve. In some areas we feel we have to improve and that means new people."

He's not about to indicate which players are in danger of losing their jobs. "No way . . . I wouldn't even say that out loud to myself at this point."

Campbell isn't concerned that he might lose quarterback Tom Wilkinson or centre Bob Howes to retirement.

Three Viking stars

Midfielders Dave Secco and Peter Zachary and goalkeeper Ted Van Waes of the University of Victoria Vikings have been selected to the Canada West University Athletic Association soccer all-star team.

Secco, a 24-year-old native of Rossland, and Van Waes, a 20-year-old Oak Bay High School graduate, played for the Canadian team in the 1979 World University Games in Mexico. Van Waes was Vikings' most valuable player in 1978.

Zachary, a 24-year-old Nanaimo native, was a member of the national team which took part in the Pan-American Games in Puerto Rico.

Sutcliffe top rookie

RICK SUTCLIFFE
. . . 17-game winner

NEW YORK (AP) — Rick Sutcliffe, a rock-solid starter on a troubled Los Angeles Dodger pitching staff, was named today as the National League's rookie of the year for 1979.

Sutcliffe, who led the Dodger staff in victories with 17 after starting spring training with little hope of making the baseball team, was an easy winner over outfielders Jeff Leonard of Houston Astros and Scot Thompson of Chicago Cubs.

The Baseball Writers' Association of America gave Sutcliffe 20 out of a possible 24 votes, while Leonard received three and Thompson one.

"I still don't believe I won it," said an incredulous but happy Sutcliffe, who had a 17-10 record and a 3.46 earned-run average in the 242 innings he pitched. "I didn't think that pitchers had as good a chance as the everyday player because they don't get the exposure. I don't know who I impressed."

Sutcliffe got his chance to shine when Burt Hooton was felled by the flu on May 3.

"Then I won the next few games and stayed in the starting rotation the rest of the season."

Sutcliffe closed with a rush, winning nine of his last 11 decisions. Six of his 10 losses were by one run.

Padres acquire Cash

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Dave Cash, three-time all-star second baseman, joined San Diego Padres in a trade Tuesday that sent outfielder Danny Briggs and utility infielder Bill Almon to Montreal Expos.

The acquisition of Cash, a 31-year-old veteran of four National League playoffs and one World Series, came after the Padres had signed left-handed pitcher John Curtis and right-hander Rick Wise, both free agents.

Cash asked to be traded after losing his starting job last spring, regaining it later. His lifetime batting average is .287, but he figured in Montreal's pennant drive.

Ballard Smith, Padres president, told a news conference the Cash deal was "one more step in the right direction for us."

Briggs, switching from outfield to first base, batted .207 while seeing action in 104 games last season. Almon, the first player taken in the 1974 draft, contributed .277 as a reserve in transition from shortstop to second.

The spray-hitting Cash was a regular for Pittsburgh and Philadelphia before signing a five-year contract with Montreal in 1976. He batted .305 for the Phillies with a major league-leading 213 hits. He set club records at Montreal in 1977 with 650 at-bats, 188 hits and 42 doubles and led the Expos that year with 91 runs scored and 21 stolen bases.

Curtis, who signed a five-year Padres contract reported worth $1.7 million, played out his option with San Francisco Giants this year, posting a 10-9 mark with a 4.17 earned-run average.

Last week, San Diego signed Wise, 34, who played for Cleveland Indians last year.

Cash, who once played in 496 consecutive games, hit .252 in 1978 with 43 runs batted in 159 games. He lost his starting job to Rodney Scott last spring but regained it, hitting .321 in 76 games.

Birds win a squeaker

Cowichan Thunderbirds of Duncan and Spectrum claimed exhibition high school boys' basketball victories Tuesday night.

Thunderbirds staged a rally to edge host Belmont Braves 90-89 while Spectrum bounced visiting St. Michael's University School, 99-40.

Gary Stockford led Thunderbirds, who trailed 89-84 with less than a minute remaining, with 35 points. Al Cole topped Belmont marksmen with the same total. Ron Crabbe scored 22 points to pace Spectrum

Swimming queen has had enough of training

CALGARY (CP) — After nine years of hard labor in the swimming pool, Helen Vanderburg decided she needed a break.

The two-time world champion in solo synchronized swimming announced her retirement after capturing the solo title at the Pan Pacific championship in Christchurch, N.Z., earlier this month.

HELEN VANDERBURG . . . two-time world champ

"I couldn't see myself going back into training," she said in a recent interview. "The competitions wouldn't be so difficult, but it's the training that wears on you.'t

In winning the Pan Pacific title, Vanderburg added one more success to a long list that includes the 1978 and 1979 world championships and the 1979 Canadian and Pan-American titles.

For the 20-year-old University of Calgary physical education student, retirement means an end to 35-40 hours of practice a week and countless hours of listening to and recording music for her routines.

But the full impact of the decision hasn't yet sunk in.

"I really haven't had a chance to think about it too much with all the exams to study for."

Vanderburg says she'll probably always be involved in some way with synchronized swimming.

"I don't want to teach. I wouldn't be satisfied as a teacher. But I'd like to use my (university) degree as a coach in synchronized swimming."

Retirement also means the chance to renew some other interests that have taken second place to the gruelling training sessions.

"I want to do everything — cross-country, snowshoeing, hiking, camping, tennis — you name it."

At her parents' home, two rooms are filled with the trophies, medals and plaques that mark her success. Vanderburg says positive thinking was the key to her victories.

"I would keep reminding myself that I was the best," she says, recalling her preparation for the 1978 world championship in West Berlin.

"If you think otherwise, you'll make a mistake. There's always a little voice in the back of your mind saying: 'You're going to blow this,' but you have to keep telling yourself you can't blow it."

This attitude she picked up from her first coach with the YWCA Aquabelles, Mary Ann Reeves, has rubbed off in other aspects of her life.

"I was just an average student in high school, but now I'm getting As in university."

Vanderburg says she might like to return to competition some day, but adds it would be unfair to someone like Kelly Kryczka, her duet partner on the Aquabelles team who is being groomed as the successor to the world throne in solo.

Reeves calls her former student a coach's dream.

"After she won the junior nationals (1974), we first saw her potential. After she won that, I asked her, 'How do you feel, Helen?' and she replied 'I've only just begun.' That shows what kind of attitude she had."

After winning the world championship in 1978, she told her family, "I can still improve. I will swim until I feel I can't improve any longer," Reeves recalls.

Despite her success in solo, Vanderburg's favorite events were in team competition.

"The team competition has always been the most fun for me because the Aquabelles have always been a team club."

Eddie Melo beats tough Seattle foe

VANCOUVER (CP) — Toronto boxer Eddie Melo took a sixth-round win over tough Les Riggin of Seattle Tuesday night in a bout at Exhibition Gardens.

Riggin consistently landed uppercuts and did a lot of holding in the fight with the 19-year-old from Toronto's west side, but could not continue after the first minute of the sixth because of a deep cut above his left eye.

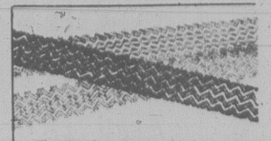

Melo was supposed to fight Riggin, who just completed a five-year stint in Leavenworth prison in the U.S., last week but was delayed by a court appearance in Montreal, where he was convicted of wounding a bouncer last year during a fight outside a tavern. He will be sentenced Dec. 7.

Melo paid Riggin $200 from his $2,500 guarantee to make up for the delay in reaching Vancouver.

McEnroe grabs net lead

MILAN, Italy (AP) — American star John McEnroe defeated Italy's Corrado Barazzutti — his opponent in the upcoming Davis Cup finals — 6-3, 6-3 in a second-round match of the $300,000 Masters tennis tournament Tuesday.

McEnroe, 21, of Douglaston, N.Y., took a four-point lead in Group B of the eight-player competition, ahead of Vitas Gerulaitis, U.S., and Argentina's Guillermo Vilas, tied with two points each.

Gerulaitis, of New York, had downed Barazzutti in the opening round Monday, brightening prospects of an American victory in the Davis Cup finals between Italy and the United States at San Francisco next month.

Tuesday, however, Gerulaitis lost to Vilas, 7-6, 6-1.

In Group A, Adriano Panatta, the other Davis Cup singles player on the Italian team, downed Peter Fleming of the United States 6-3, 6-2, tying the New Yorker at two points in the standings.

Thursday's finals at the Milan indoor sports palace will pit the players with the most points in each of the two round-robin groups.

It was McEnroe's fifth victory in six matches against Italy's No.1 player.

Fleming, who had downed countryman Roscoe Tanner in the opening day of the competition, blamed tiredness and poor first serves for his defeat by Panatta.

Sweden's Bjorn Borg made short work of Tanner, winning 6-2, 6-4

Carol Loos stretches point lead

CALGARY — Carol Turney-Loos of the University of Victoria Vikettes padded her lead while husband Billy Loos of the UVic Vikings retained his first-place position in their respective basketball scoring races in the Canada West University Athletic Association.

Carol scored 58 points during a weekend series against Lethbridge Pronghorns to boost her total to 156 in six women's division games.

Billy lead the men's section with 105 points in four games. Neither Billy nor runner-up Perry Mirkovich of Lethbridge played league games last weekend.

Champ hides weight

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Victor Galindez, light-heavyweight boxing champion, refused to make his weight public Tuesday and would not step on the scales until he was sure no reporters could see the results.

Galindez defends his World Boxing Association title Friday against Marvin Johnson, former holder of the World Boxing Council's championship.

It's the third championship fight in New Orleans for Galindez. He lost his crown to Mike Rossman, then won it back last summer.

Johnson weighed in at 177 on Tuesday.

Mr. Goldman . . . You're A Wonderful Buyer!

If I didn't tell you I am a great buyer, who would? (but I am, really) . . . With the holiday season on the way, and if you're thinking of clothing, there's no better time, for 2 reasons. First, our suppliers produce the finest name brand clothing both in Canada and Europe. Secondly, our prices have never looked better. So come on in, you'll see . . . Murray

YES, GOLDMAN IS ON YOUR SIDE THIS CHRISTMAS

THIS IS SOME SALE THURS., FRI. AND SAT.

Here we go. I managed to pick up 1,000 pairs of dress slacks from several top clothing houses who must remain nameless (oh, you know, Mr. nameless) from flannels to worsteds, some gabs and tweeds, but definitely 100% all wool. Choose from plain or pleated front in belt loops or extension waistband. Honest to goodness $60 value — your price, $33.

Ever feel the luxury of a silk shirt? (No, not on your gal, sir) on your own body — it's just great. Our Shrewd buyers (that's me) picked up mounds of 100% silk shirts, all shades, at just — ready — only $38 (Murray, how do you do it?)

I know you're waiting with bated breath to hear about my suits, so listen. We bought them right from several manufacturers we're proud to be associated with. So help me, regular values on suits to $295, even some $325-$375 . . . your price (get ready) a very tempting $188, and when you consider tailoring, the fabrics, and mostly 3-piece vested styles, take my word for it, this is a bargain, sir.

Quite a story, eh? Our shelves are bulging at the seams with sweaters, sweaters and more sweaters . . . and, oh, so magnificent — from Italy, England and France. The shades and styles are absolutely outstanding (control yourself, Goldman) . . . all at a pre-Christmas 20% off on every sweater in the store including cashmere. (Tell me you like me).

Am I getting to you? Now we come to sport jackets and, oh, how I wish I could mention the maker's name . . . great fall tones from rugged Harris tweed to fine wools. We bought them right and offer you a generous 20% discount on every jacket in the store. (you're amazing, Mr. Goldman)

O.K., now, let's talk about gowns. (No, it's not a "drag"). I'm talking about dressing gowns. Short gowns, mid length, full length and Monk robes (with hood, yet) . . . from cottons to wools to soft cuddly velours (now, I'm talking to the ladies). I didn't make a special buy but still offering a 25% discount on every gown in our store (call it a Christmas present from M.G.).

Let's continue. Italy is proud of their very own Sophia Loren and their dress shirts (in that order) and we're proud of our Italian selection of shirts, plain and stripes with the new shorter collar. Reg. $25 and $30 value at just $13.88 (when you consider the cost of my plane trip to Italy, the price is right).

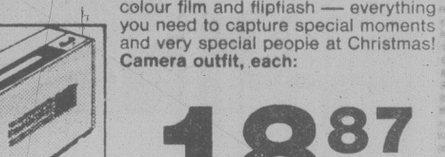

And, for the big finish, let's talk about topcoats, and raincoats, from name brand wools, tweeds, to cotton and suedes, the ultra in fashion and tailoring . . . We'll tempt you with a whopping (brace yourself now) 25% discount on any coat you choose. That's my story, so come on in — I'll wait for you . . . Murray.

Berth in Lake Placid Olympics is goal as World Cup ski season set to open

VAL D'ISERE, France (Reuter) — The World Ski Cup season opens here next week, providing the first glimpse of potential medalists in February's Lake Placid Winter Olympics.

The world's top alpine skiers will be able to test in competition the effect of six months of training.

Those skiing in the downhill and giant slalom events from Dec. 5-8 know that Olympic teams will be chosen from their World Cup performances.

Countries are allowed to bring only 14 skiers, plus reserves, to compete in the men's and women's slalom, giant slalom and downhill events.

Training has gone on through summer and autumn. The Americans sought out snow in the high mountain passes of the Andes, while the Austrians, French, Swiss, Italians and Russians set up camp in the rough glaciers of the Alps.

A survey of competitors in the World Cup shows the shifting fortunes, often determined by injuries, which may decide Olympic medallists.

The man to beat is imperious Swedish star Ingemar Stenmark. The explosive 23-year-old skier is master of slalom and giant slalom, a skill that brought him three World Cup championships.

He lost the crown only after rules were changed to encourage skiers to enter all three events, including the downhill.

Stenmark, never strong in the downhill, fell while practising the event this summer in the hope of regaining the over-all World Cup title. The spill cost him a month of practice and he has decided to concentrate on the slaloms.

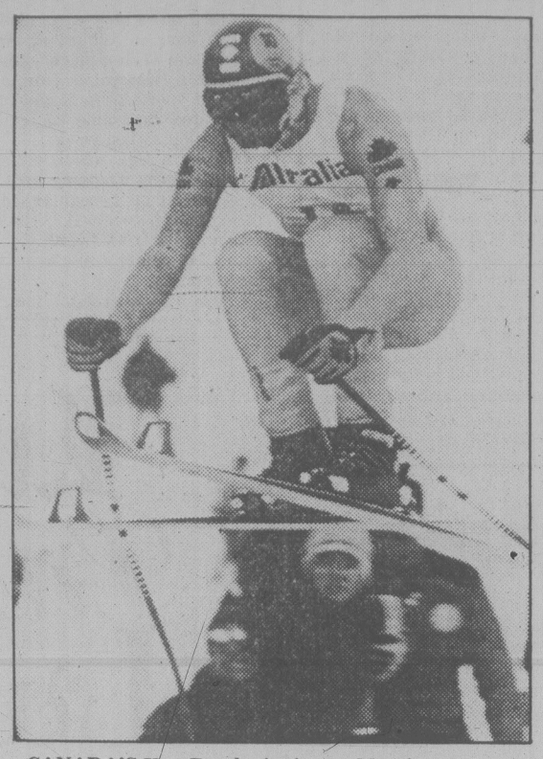

The varying fortunes of male skiers are reflected in the Austrian, Swiss and Italian teams which took first, second and third places respectively in the Cup last year.

The Austrians, who between 1948 and 1976 never left an Olympic or World Cup event empty-handed, have injury problems as well as a shortage of experienced newcomers.

Franz Klammer, the backbone of the men's team, has been suffering knee ligament strains.

Peter Wirnsberger, hailed as his likely sucessor since 1977, was injured in a motorcycle accident in September. He has recovered fully but he lost a crucial month of practice. Val d'Isere should indicate the shape both men are in.

For Austrian coach Karl Kahr the problem is what to do with tough old hands like Sepp Walcher, Ernest Winkler and Werner Grissmann, who refuse to yield easily to the young hopefuls.

CANADA'S Ken Read winning at Morzine, France

Potential stars such as teenager Christian Orlainsky and Leonhard Stock will have to fight for every split second to topple the old pros for a place in the Olympics.

The Swiss men's team is bursting with talented and proven young stars. Led by Peter Luscher, at 23 last year's over-all World Ski Cup champion, they eagerly await the Olympics.

Five Swiss skiers — Jacques Luthy, Toni Burgler, Martial Donnet, Werner Rhyner and Luscher — are ranked in the top flight. They expect to emerge as the next power in alpine skiing at Lake Placid.

For the Italians, the skiing accident of team leader Leonardo David has marred their prospects. David has been lying semi-conscious in a hospital since July.

The Italians have seasoned veterans such as Herbert Plank, Piero Grosand Gustavo Thoeni, but they seem to lack a driving force.

Surprises this year may come from teams outside the traditional forces.

The top 10 skiers listed after last year's World Cup season included two Americans, two Austrians, two Italians, and one each from Sweden, Switzerland, Yugoslavia and Liechtenstein.

Behind these World Cup leaders and prime candidates for Olympic gold are other potential downhill, slalom and giant slalom medallists.

Canada, the U.S., Yugoslavia and the Soviet Union are seeking their first men's gold medal at the Olympics.

American hopes rest on the twins Steve and Phil Mahre.

Phil Mahre, who contested the over-all World Cup title with Luscher up to the last race last year, will be making his first major competitive race since breaking a leg at Lake Placid last March.

Five Canadians gained World Cup points last year, four of them — Ken Read of Calgary, Dave Murray of Abbotsford, Steve Podborski of Toronto and Dave Irwin of Thunder Bay, Ont. — in the downhill.

If Read had not been disqualified at Morzine because of the design of his ski suit, he may have gone on to take the title. He must be considered a serious threat in the World Cup downhill competition and at the Olympics.

The Yugoslavs will be sending three strong contenders in their hunt for gold on the giant slalom course — Bojan Krizay, Boris Strel and Jose Kuralt.

The Soviet Union pins its hopes on downhill star Vladimir Makeev and slalom specialist Vladimir Andreev.

West German hopes will be riding on Sepp Ferstl, who had two wins at Kitzbuhel last year, and Christian Neureuther, who at 30 won two World Cup slaloms last season.

Scandinavians will be watching Swede Stenmark and Norwegian downhill specialist Erik Haker. A second Norwegian, Jarle Halsnes, a European Cup winner, will be going all out in the giant slalom.

Umpires in black, beer on wicket as cricket starts uncertain journey

SYDNEY (Reuter) — International cricket started an uncertain journey into the future here Tuesday with fights and enough noise, color and lights to overpower an adjacent pop concert by Elton John.

The result of the march around Australia during the next 10 weeks by the English, West Indian and Australian teams is likely to determine the future world course of a game that until recently has been little changed by centuries of play.

About 21,000 fans, many clutching cans of beer, sprawled around the 50,000-crowd-capacity grounds to see Australia beat the West Indies by five wickets in a one-day, 50-overs-a-side game.

Lines formed outside the Sydney Cricket ground about an hour before the 2 p.m. starting time.

Absence of some members was certainly a protest against the doings on the field. For a start, they regarded cricket as only a daytime sport and the game that unfolded under the floodlights Tuesday evening was not the game they remembered.

Umpires clad in black clothing and resembling sinister movie gangsters replaced the white-clothed arbiters of the past. As the floodlights came into play and the evening cooled, they donned brown jackets to add another color to the many already on the field.

White instead of a traditional red ball was used while the players traditional white gear was replaced by yellow and green stripes for the Australians and maroon and grey stripes for the West Indians.

The innovations had been tried over the past two years by Australian television chief Kerry Packer's World Series cricket, but until Tuesday evening his rebel series had not been embraced by traditional cricket authorities.

England, which exported cricket to Australia, New Zealand, India, Pakistan and The West Indies, is still not totally convinced about the changes.

Its players took the field today in traditional white.

Outside the members stands, however, there was no doubting the emotions stirred by the new ideas.

The public areas took on a carnival atmosphere, helped by the arrival of two parachutists and parades by baton-twirling marching girls.

Police broke up at least a dozen fights as beer consumption increased and there was a constant hum of noise around the ground.

About 100 yards away a pop concert by British singer Elton John seemed almost sedate.

There were fears the music might disrupt the cricket, but the reverse was almost true.

Watching from seats only, the Elton John fans seemed like a well-behaved school class while next door the scene resembled one of Australia's famous beer-drinking barbecues.

The game ended with a football-like invasion of the pitch and two men pouring beer on the wicket, perhaps celebrating the birth of the new era of cricket.

Trojans move up

Alabama, idle last week, remains atop The Associated Press U.S. college football poll, but high-scoring University of Southern California Trojans have has edged past Rose Bowl foe Ohio State for the No. 2 spot.

Alabama, which concludes its regular season against Auburn on Saturday, received 34 of 62 first-place votes and 1,193 of a possible 1,240 points from a nationwide panel of sports writers and broadcasters, who voted the same 20 teams into this week's poll as last week.

Southern Cal, which clinched a Rose Bowl berth by whipping arch-rival UCLA 49-14 to wind up its regular schedule with a 10-0-1 record, received 12 first-place votes and jumped from fourth to second place with 1,142 points in the next-to-last poll of the regular season.

That was one point more than Ohio State, which was idle last week and dropped to third place with 13 No. 1 votes and 1,141 points. That's five first-place votes and 73 points less than the Buckeyes received last week.

Florida State, 11-0 and bound for the Orange Bowl, continued its season-long climb, moving up from fifth to fourth with 997 points on the strength of its 27-16 victory over Florida.

Oklahoma, Florida State's Orange Bowl foe, jumped from eighth to fifth with one first-place vote and 963 points, thanks to its victory over Nebraska.

Texas is sixth in this week's poll, followed by Nebraska, Arkansas, Brigham Young and Houston.

The second ten consists of Pittsburgh, Purdue, Washington, Auburn, Michigan, Tulane, South Carolina, Clemson, Penn State and Baylor.

Canada takes new swim plunge

TORONTO (CP) — If Canada picks up some prestige during next year's international swimming season, officials may look upon this week as the steppping stone.

About 50 of the country's stop swimmers are acting a guinea pigs during a five-day testing and evaluation program at the University of Toronto.

The tests are unique to the Canadian swim scene, being the first plunge into trying to discover exactly what physical characteristics make a world champion swimmer.

"Canada is behind the rest of the world in the evaluation of the elite athlete," Michael Cox, a U of T exercise physiologist, said Monday.

Cox and Robin Campbell, who is a U of T fitness co-ordinator and general manager of the Canadian swimming team, have put together a battery of sophisticated machinery that will test the fitness of the swimmers. The data will be analysed by top sports scientists.

The pair said they hope to find answers to several questions that can be used in training programs geared toward peaking at the Moscow Summer Olympics next year.

For example, is one type of body better than another for top performances? Does body type vary between sprinters and distance swmmers?

What is the happy medium for body fat when too much hinders performance and too little reduces buoyancy, causing poor results?

And what is the best oxygen use for each particular swimmer? Cox and Campbell explained that sports scientists believe it is possible to train athletes to increase the amount of oxygen used in a competition and how to get more use of the oxygen before the body automatically switches to other, less efficient energy sources.

Campbell said the $50,000 pilot program should have both short- and long-term effects.

The data should provide a base from which Canadian swimming officials can assemble a profile of the perfect swimmer, which can be used as a screening device to identify potential talent, Campbell said. It also should help the swimmers participating in the program.

"We will be able to tell each individual athlete his or her results on every test and how that compares with the team average by the time the program ends," Campbell said. "They will go home with a booklet containing information on their strengths and weaknesses which will help them determine the areas they need to emphasize in training.

Four writers gain football hall spots

MONTREAL (CP) — Four oldtimers in the sports-writing profession were honored when the Football Reporters of Canada made its first inductions to the the media section of the Canadian Football Hall of Fame.

The inductions, held during the FRC's annual meeting during Grey Cup week, honored Baz O'Meara, Hal Walker and Ivan Miller, all now dead, and Ted Reeve.

Reeve, who once played in the Grey Cup, has been associated with Canadian football for more than 60 years and is a columnist for Toronto Sun.

The football reporters approved a slate of officers with J. P. Chartrand of The Canadian Press, Montreal, succeeding Ernie Afaghanis of CBC Edmonton as president.

Surgery for Park

BOSTON (AP) — Brad Park had minor surgery on his right knee Tuesday and Boston Bruins said he would be out of National Hockey League action for at least a month.

The arthroscopic surgery, performed with a thick needle which is inserted in the knee, is a procedure the all-star defenceman has undergone twice before.

"Due to previous problems with Brad's knee, it's difficult to make any predictions as to his return," said the club's physical therapist, Jim Kausek. "We do know that he will rest for one month."

Kausek said Tuesday's surgery at Massachusetts General Hospital "was to smooth the area under the knee cap and also to remove small bone spurs."

Park's right knee was operated on a year ago for torn cartilage, and he had arthroscopic surgery on the knee last January and again in September.

RCMP weeds out Parti Quebecois supporters

By KITTY McKINSEY

OTTAWA (CP) — Federal public servants who are members of the Parti Quebecois or are suspected of being separatist sympathizers are considered security risks and have little chance of getting certain government jobs, Solicitor-General Allan Lawrence said Tuesday.

He said a 1976 cabinet directive instructing the RCMP to treat such public servants as threats to national security and to report them to the proper authorities is still in effect.

The existence of the directive was revealed Tuesday by Mr. Justice David C. McDonald, chairman of the royal commission investigating allegations of RCMP wrongdoing.

It was a confirmation of a Dec. 15, 1972, instruction from "a senior government committee" to the RCMP security service to report on any public servants with separatist sympathies it uncovered while screening applicants for sensitive government jobs.

McDonald said in May, 1976 — six months before the Parti Quebecois came to power in Quebec — the security service was told to pass on any information it had on party members within the federal public service, or public servants with separatist tendencies.

Lawrence told reporters the directive, which was not made public, is still in force, but the RCMP does not go out looking for separatists in the public service.

If a person is being checked for security clearance and the force finds information on his "separatist tendencies" in its files, the information would be turned over to the proper authorities, he said.

"The over-riding factors in my mind are reliability and loyalty and that means believing in Canada as a viable country," Lawrence said.

But he couldn't define the word separatist and said he did not know what definition the RCMP used.

Robin Bourne, former head of a security and intelligence analysis group in the solicitor-general's department, told the commission Tuesday the RCMP compiled lists of public servants who supported Quebec independence, had links with separatists or FLQ terrorists or who appeared sympathetic to the separatist cause.

He said the government was alarmed at being caught off guard in October, 1970, and wanted to be sure there would be no repeat of the crisis that involved Front de Liberation du Quebec terrorists.

Warren Allmand, solicitor-general in the Liberal government from 1972 to 1976, told reporters the RCMP considered the Parti Quebecois a target until June, 1975, when then prime minister Trudeau ordered the security service not to investigate the party unless it advocated overthrowing the government by force.

After that the force continued to keep an eye only on members who were federal public servants, Allmand said. "I wouldn't want a pequiste (Parti Quebecois member) working for me," he said.

Bourne, who left the security group this year to beeome an assistant deputy minister, said he "leaned on" the RCMP in 1971 and 1972 to supply names of separatist public servants.

He said he never asked security service officers how they got their information and had no way of checking whether it was accurate.

He gave deputy ministers the names of suspected separatists in their departments and "in most cases they were very grateful for this information." He said it was not his job to check whether the public servants he named were later disciplined or fired.

The procedure was laid down in a 1963 cabinet directive which is still in force although it was considered out of date in 1971, Bourne said. It concentrated on threats from foreign communists and fascists and did not take into account Quebec separatism.

Bourne, a career soldier and a former member of a royal commission which investigated RCMP internal discipline and public grievance procedures, appeared self-confident and direct during his two days of testimony.

But he seemed exasperated Tuesday when commissioner Guy Gilbert repeatedly asked him whether he knew the security service inevitably would have to break the law in carrying out its duties.

"It was not up to me to ask them how they were getting along with breaking the law," Bourne replied.

FLQ terrorist named informer

MONTREAL (CP) — The Keable inquiry into police wrongdoing has delayed further public testimony until Dec. 4, pending a court decision on whether Montreal police should be forced to disclose the identity of police informants within the Front de Liberation du Quebec.

Commissioner Jean Keable made the announcement today after lawyers for the inquiry had made a brief appearance before Chief Justice Jules Deschenes of Quebec Superior Court.

Det.-Sgt. Emile Bisaillon filed a petition for a writ that would prevent Keable from asking him if reputed terrorist Francois Seguin was in fact working for the Montreal anti-terrorist squad.

The court case was to have been heard today, but Chief Justice Deschenes delyed the start of hearings until Thursday, so he could familiarize himself with the written submissions.

In the most startling development of the hearings to date, Keable Tuesday branded Seguin an informer without citing evidence to back the allegation.

Bisaillon's petition asks the court to quash a subpoena issued for a police file purportedly dealing with Seguin, as well as tapes of conversations between Bisaillon, Seguin and commission lawyers.

Seguin has refused to testify, but a source within the commission hinted that he had confessed to being an informer in private, off-the-record meetings.

As a preliminary step, the petition asks that Keable be ordered to delay for at least 10 days any questioning of Bisaillon that would make him reveal his sources of information.

Keable said he had no choice but to disclose Seguin's "close links" Montreal police, noting that to do otherwise would involve the commission in "an astonishing cover-up operation."

Seguin wept, as did Robert Comeau, an alleged FLQ member whom Keable described in the same breath as a "dupe" of the police.

Keable angrily ordered lawyer Alain Beauvais to be silent when he tried to speak on the men's behalf.

The allegations, which brought gasps and shouts of "mudslinging" from among the spectators, were termed a denial of fundamental legal rights by several lawyers.

Keable's direct, unqualified accusation raised the possibility that Seguin was a police plant in the FLQ, possibly during the kidnap crisis of 1970.

The inquiry has already heard from a confessed police informer, Carole Devault, who says Comeau recruited her into the FLQ.

CBC sued for plagiarism

MONTREAL (CP) — Two women who say the idea for the French-language television program Tele-Jeans was theirs have filed a $237,792 damage suit against the CBC for plagiarism.

Therese Brodeur and Danielle Chaput-Malboeuf say they offered the idea of an information program aimed at children to the French-network of the CBC two years ago.

A few weeks later, they said, they were told there had been a change of plans.

Police beat confession from him — taxi driver

MONTREAL (CP) — A 26-year-old taxi driver told the Quebec Police Commission Tuesday that two Montreal Urban Community homicide detectives beat him in February, 1977, until he confessed to the murder of a man.

John Francis Gariepy — who was acquitted last year of murdering Eddie Losinger — testified that one of the policemen, Jocelyn Dextraze, ordered him to strip naked in an interrogation room at a downtown police station on Feb. 5, 1977, and kneel down facing a wall.

He said the other officer, Guy Gelderbloom, then showed him a picture of Losinger's body, and said: "Look what you've done to your friend." When notified he was being charged with murder, Gariepy said he demanded to see his lawyer.

He said rather than replying, the policemen began beating him over the head repeatedly with a large, three-inch thick ledger until he fell to the ground. "Gelderbloom then grabbed me by the hair and said 'Get up Frank' and put me on a chair," Gariepy said.

"They then started making accusations and said they had statements against me. They said I might as well confess and everything would be fine. I said I was innocent."

Gariepy said the two detectives resumed beating him with the book, and claimed Dextraze kicked him in the knee and shoulder when he fell off the chair. He could not say how long the beatings went on, but noted he fell off the chair twice and Gelderbloom picked him up by the hair.

Gariepy said he then "agreed" to make a confession "because it was the only way I could get them to stop beating me."

He said he was taken to another room and "concocted" a statement confessing to murdering Losinger, reciting it into a dictaphone. He added the police officers "furnished" some of the information for the statement.

Gariepy said he hesitated at one point and was promptly kicked in the chest by Gelderbloom. He added that he only told his lawyer about the beatings because Gelderbloom had threatened him with more beatings if he said anything.

Gariepy also told the commission that on Feb. 7, he was taken before a coroner near the same room in which he had been beaten. The coroner "read something in French" and he was returned to his cell.

Some 26 witnesses are scheduled to appear before the commission.

Medical teams being recruited

TORONTO (CP) — The International Red Cross has appealed for eight Canadian medical teams willing to work in primitive, muddy conditions to treat Cambodian refugees in Thailand.

Doctors and nurses must be willing to stay at least three months in the refugee camps and should have at least three years of experience, said Elaine Slater, chairman of the board of Operation Lifeline, which issued the appeal Monday on behalf of the Red Cross.

Each team requires one doctor, five nurses and one administrator to work under the direction of the Red Cross. They should be ready to leave by Dec. 15.

Operation Lifeline, formed earlier this year to help Vietnamese refugees, is accepting donations.

"The war on death is a costly one," said Wendy Schelew. "The cost of sending one team to Thailand comes to $80,500, which includes transportation, lodging, war casualty insurance, medical supplies and salaries."

Editor cleared

AMHERST, N.S. (CP) — The managing editor of the Amherst News and a reporter-photographer from the newspaper were acquitted Tuesday of a charge of obstructing police.

Provincial Judge David Cole ruled that managing editor Douglas Harkness and James Lipsit were not knowingly on a restricted site when arrested by RCMP on Sept. 30.

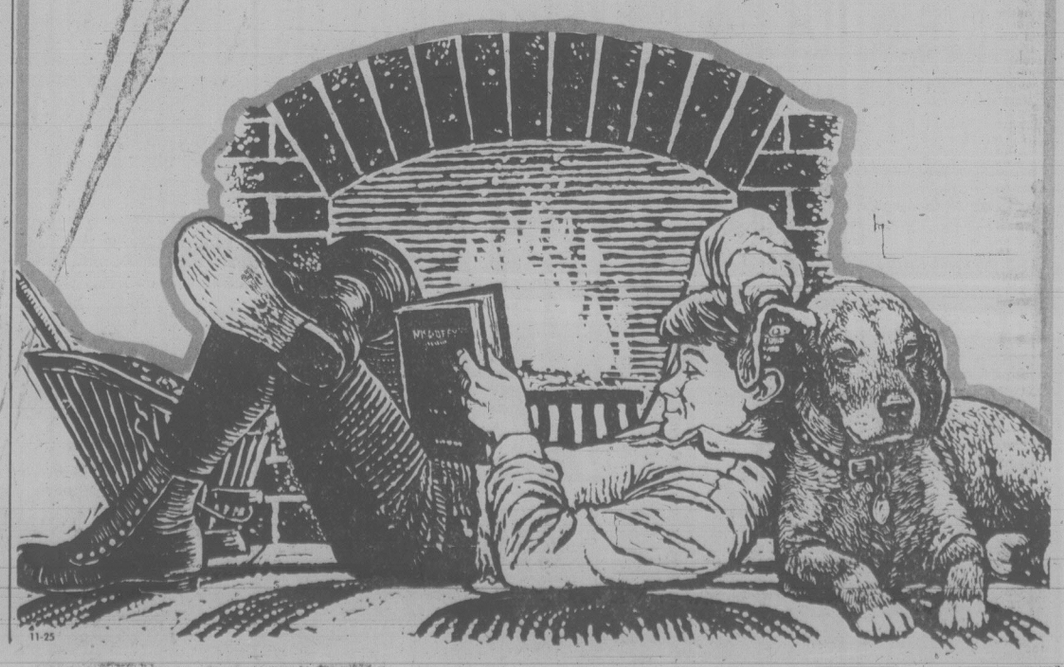

The two were arrested on a rural road near Springhill, N.S., while investigating the closure of a road leading to a dump site. Police had closed the road while a demolition team was detonating a Second World War bomb found by hunters.

A "nugget" of information:
B.C. mining paid over $192 million in taxes last year.
During 1978, the B.C. mining industry paid over $110 million in taxes to our province, plus more than $69 million in federal taxes. Mining taxation is also felt at the local level...with over $13 million in municipal taxes paid by the industry last year.* That's a total of over $192 million, or about $75 for every British Columbian. As an important source of tax revenues for our province—and as a large scale job-producer—mining is a major contributor to the B.C. economy.

Puget Power not giving up

MOUNT VERNON, Wash. (AP) — Puget Sound Power and Light Co. says it is not giving up plans for a nuclear power plant in the Skagit Valley, despite a negative vote on the project by Skagit County commissioners.

"Absolutely, we will not abandon that site," said Don Noel, a spokesman for the private Bellevue-based utility.

Commissioners voted 3-to-0 Tuesday against renewing Puget Power's zoning permit for the project. That means a five-year rezoning contract expires Dec. 31. Skagit County prosecutor Tom Mosher said the utility can appeal the decision to superior court.

"We'll have to examine ways to get the rezone extended, through litigation or whatever," Noel said.

Puget Power, Washington Water Power Co. of Spokane, Portland General Electric and Pacific Power and Light have sunk about $260 million into preliminary work on the project, Noel said. Puget's share is about $106 million, he said.

The vote by the three-member board of county commissioners followed the recommendation of the Skagit County planning commission and an advisory ballot Nov. 6 in which county residents voted by a 71 per cent margin against having the plants in the valley.

After the vote, Puget Power said it was deferring its plans for the plants for up to three years.

Skagit County prosecutor Tom Mosher said the utility can appeal the decision to Superior Court.

The vote came one day after a minor earthquake, centred between Anacortes and Burlington, rustled parts of Skagit and Whatcom counties. The danger of a severe earthquake has been a concern throughout hearings on the zoning permit.

Soviet navy active as U.S. ships scurry

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Soviet navy has doubled its operations in the Far East this year while the U.S. Navy has spread its available ships to cover crisis missions in the Indian Ocean-Arabian Sea area, U.S. intelligence officials say.

U.S. intelligence officials outlined the growing Soviet navy activity in the Far East in interviews Tuesday. The Soviet moves coincide with the diversion of U.S. aircraft carrier strength from East Asian waters into the Indian Ocean following the taking of hostages at the U.S. embassy in Tehran.

The United States has sent two powerful carrier task forces totalling 14 ships from the western Pacific and South China Sea into the Indian Ocean.

This has left the U.S. Navy temporarily without any aircraft carriers in the entire western Pacific region. The carrier Coral Sea is expected to arrive from the U.S. shortly to fill that gap, at least partially.

In a related matter, a U.S. official who asked not to be named said Tuesday that the Soviet Union is sending jet fighters and other arms to North Yemen, adding a new element of concern in the Middle East.

Earlier this year, the U.S. speeded delivery of anti-tank and anti-aircraft weapons to North Yemen after fighting broke out with Soviet-backed South Yemen.

Then last week, North Yemen said it would not permit its territory to be used for any operation against Iran. "We have expressed our concern to North Yemen," a U.S. official said. "We don't want them to be under any illusion they can play both ends against the middle."

Japan and other countries in the Pacific have registered alarm at the growth of the power of the Soviet navy in the Pacific, underscored last June by the appearance of the first Soviet aircraft carrier, the 40,000-ton Minsk, to be based in the Far East.

U.S. intelligence officials say increased Soviet navy operations in Asian waters can be traced to Soviet support of Vietnam and Hanoi's confrontation with China and the Vietnamese invasion of Cambodia.

The U.S. specialists said a significant change in Soviet Pacific Fleet operations this year has been the beginning of the deployment of Soviet military planes to Vietnam and flights into the South China Sea, a strategic stretch of ocean.

Mail makes profit

WASHINGTON (AP) — The annual balance sheet of the U.S. Mail has black ink on the bottom line for the first time in 34 years.

Postmaster General William Bolger announced a surplus of almost $470 million for fiscal 1979 Tuesday and said that means there will be no increase in postal rates until 1981.

"I can say with no exaggeration that the postal service today is in the vanguard of good government and that America enjoys the best postal service of any nation in the world," Bolger said.

"Our postage rates — which are the lowest of any industrialized nation — will remain unchanged for at least the next 13 months."

The last increase, to 15 cents for first-class mail from 13 cents, was in 1978.

However, more red ink is expected in 1980.

Prisoner 'grabbed, pounded' guard

A 55-year-old guard told a B.C. Supreme Court jury Tuesday he was grabbed and pounded by a 36-year-old inmate just after they got into a station wagon to return to Matsqui penitentiary from a local hospital.

Alexander Smith was testifying in the second day of the trial of Thomas Young Lackey, accused of attempting to murder Smith Nov. 3, 1978, by stabbing him and wounding him with intent by stabbing him.

Lackey is also accused of escaping custody and theft of a citizen's car in Matsqui and five charges in Saanich Nov. 8, 1978, including attempted murder of Saanich police Sgt. William Hillcoat, wounding him with intent, armed robbery, using a shotgun and possession of a shotgun for a dangerous purpose.

The jury has heard from 13 of the expected 30 prosecution witnesses in the trial which will last well into next week. It is being presided over by Mr. Justice Howard Callaghan.

Smith said he and fellow guard Phillip Young took Lackey to MSA Hospital in Matsqui from the medium-security penitentiary in the Fraser Valley. Lackey was dressed in institutional "greens" including green parka, trousers and shirt. He searched him before leaving and found odds and ends and a hairbrush.

After Lackey was given half an hour's physiotherapy treatment in hospital, Smith said Lackey complained of a sore back and was bent over a bit with his arm up his back.

He helped Lackey down the hall but not in handcuffs, something for which he said he was later given a two-day suspension without pay for not following escort procedure by handcuffing Lackey to him.

Smith said they got in the back of the escort vehicle with Young acting as driver and Lackey suddenly threw his left arm around his shoulder, said he had a knife and was taking him hostage, and was pounding on his right back.

The struggle lasted for a matter of seconds and Lackey tried to get out the front door but Young slammed the door in his face. Young assisted Smith into hospital.

Young, 44, testified he was about to back the vehicle away from the hospital when he heard a struggle and words and got outside to try to get Smith out.

There was a sharp object in Lackey's right hand and Smith was bleeding and Lackey's arm was going up and down in Smith's back area.

Lackey tried to get over the front seat and Young grabbed the ignition keys and slammed the door. Lackey said "I will kill you, you son of a bitch," a remark Young believed was aimed at him.

As Young helped Smith to the hospital door, Lackey got out of the vehicle and ran.

The trial scene then shifted to Saanich with Sgt. Norman Ellison, head of Saanich police identification section, introducing a booklet of photographs including a car with its front over the sidewalk at McKenzie Avenue and Cedar Hill Crossroad and one wheel buckled and another broken off.

There were two holes in the outer part of the driver's door and one hole had penetrated the metal. A sawn-off 12-gauge shotgun was lying 16 feet from the edge of the curb and inside the trunk he found a box of 22 live rounds of shotgun shells.

Also at the scene was Hillcoat's police cruiser. Ellison took the photographs the early morning of Nov. 8.

Dr. Arthur Elder, a radiologist at Royal Jubilee Hospital, examined X-rays taken of Hillcoat and Lackey.

He said Hillcoat had metal fragments compatible with shotgun pellets embedded in the soft tissue of his right thigh, many penetrating about one inch, and four similar fragments penetrating three to four inches in the abdomen area.

He saw no damage to internal organs or bones and counted 33 or 34 pellets on the X-rays.

He said Lackey had a shattering-type injury to his left eye with two large fragments of metal and other pieces of metal extending to his cheek. The appearance was typical of a gunshot wound.

Lackey's left leg below the knee was fractured with multiple small metallic matter in the bone and soft tissue. In his right thigh there was a large foreign body in the soft tissue but no evidence of a bone injury.

Elder said he would be surprised if there was not severe damage to Lackey's eye.

Dr. John Penny, an orthopedic specialist on duty at Royal Jubilee Nov. 8, 1978, said he treated both men.

Hillcoat had a gunshot wound on the right side of his body with multiple entry wounds between the rib cage and the mid-thigh. They were soft-tissue wounds and no vital structures were affected except one small nerve. There was no evidence of pellets in his bones.

There were probably 36 pellet wounds, he said. He had no fear the policeman would die.

Lackey had a fractured lower left leg with entry and exist gunshot wounds two or three inches up from the ankle joint.

There was a wound in his right thigh, on the inside and back, with no exit wound.

Penny said he was aware of Lackey being shot in his wallet but when he checked out the man's buttocks, there was no wound.

The trial was to continue today.

Before the judge

A 27-year-old man who chose the wrong name to assume was given a suspended sentence and placed on 12 months probation by Judge Harold Alder in provincial court Tuesday.

Larry James Steinhoff, 1204 Yates, pleaded guilty to impersonating Larry James Thompson for the purpose of avoiding medical treatment payments to Royal Jubilee Hospital.

Crown counsel Nicholas Lang told the court Steinhoff was allegedly beaten up Nov. 19 by members of a local motorcycle club and was left on a roadway where a motorist picked him up shortly before 6:30 a.m. and took him to Royal Jubilee.

Steinhoff, who was suffering from face cuts and stomach pains, gave the name of Thompson to three separate sets of Victoria police officers. When police did a routine check on the computerized network, they found there was a warrant outstanding for the arrest of a Larry James Thompson.

When Steinhoff appeared before Judge Fred Green last Tuesday, he said the name was all a mistake and gave his real name to the court.

Defence lawyer Stephen Kelliher said Steinhoff and his common-law wife were recent arrivals from Windsor. Kelliher said that Steinhoff, who had an extensive criminal record in Windsor for theft, skipping bail, criminal negligence, wilful damage and breach of an undertaking, came with intentions of starting his life over again.

However, Steinhoff went to two bars on Nov. 19, met up with the motorcycle club members and was beaten.

Kelliher asked the judge to take into consideration Steinhoff had already spent eight days in custody on the charge and he had no reason to assume the name of Thompson because he was on welfare and could get medical assistance "any time he wanted."

"You didn't get much advantage out of your misrepresentation," Alder said to Steinhoff. "You chose the wrong name."

The judge also ordered Steinhoff to accept any alcoholic therapy prescribed during his probation and not to enter any licenced premise during that time.

A 23-year-old Malaysian student was remanded a further week for psychiatric tests to be completed.

Kian Hock Koh was charged with the Nov. 8 attempted murder of 19-year-old Nancetta Lorraine Kobe outside her residence at 1635 Cook and with possession of a dangerous weapon.

Lang said the examination was to determine Koh's degree of danger to the public and not to determine whether he was fit to stand trial. Koh was declared mentally fit Nov. 13.

A 27-year-old man who broke two conditions of probation was given 30-day, concurrent jail terms.

James Douglas Pruden, 3134 Alder, pleaded guilty Nov. 9 and was remanded until Tuesday for a pre-sentence report.

Pruden was convicted Nov. 7, 1978, of possession of heroin, and Jan. 18, 1979, of impaired driving and driving while suspended. He was given jail sentences of 45 days for the drug charge and 30 days concurrent on the two driving offences and placed on probations of one year and six months, respectively.

Crown counsel Don Laughton said Pruden was seen playing pool in the Colony Inn beer parlor, breaching a condition which prohibitied him from entering a licenced premise, and also refused a blood or urine test, breaching another condition.

Judge Blake Allan ordered a pre-sentence report for an 18-year-old who admitted a July 3 break-in.

Ian William Muir, 1075 Nicholson, re-elected trial by magistrate and entered the guilty plea prior to a scheduled preliminary hearing Tuesday.

Crown counsel Wayne Smith said the break-in occurred at a warehouse at 3948 Quadra.

Muir was described as a "street kid" who left home for a week and a half before the incident and slept in a large vat at the former St. Michelle's winery on Quadra.

Smith said Muir was apparently under the influence of CV-100, a gasoline additive which some young people sniff.

Muir's mother testified that her son went through five gallons of CV-100 "and all the plastic bags in the house" in one week.

Allan ordered a pre-sentence report for Dec. 11 after learning that Muir was convicted Sept. 20 this year for possession of marijuana, supplying liquor to a minor, and being a minor in possession of liquor.

He was given a suspended sentence, placed on 12 months probation, and ordered to perform 75 hours of community service work on the drug conviction, and fined $100 and $50 on the Liquor Control and Licencing Act convictions.

Fined $300 for driving with a blood-alcohol content over .08 was 41-year-old Timothy Russell Goudie of 2053 Kaltasin.

Lifetime driving ban suggested by judge in 'tragic, pathetic' case

Judge William Ostler levied fines totalling $1,450 and said he would recommend a lifetime driving suspension for a 30-year-old Port Alberni man who was convicted on one drinking-driving count and pleaded guilty to five others Tuesday in Victoria provincial court.

Alexander Ronald Bell, of 2542 - 9th Avenue, was found guilty of impaired driving and entered guilty pleas to two additional counts of the same charge, two counts of refusing a breath test demand, and one count of driving with a blood-alcohol content over .08.

The charges arose over driving incidents in the Greater Victoria area on March 28 and 29, April 1, and May 24 this year.

Ostler imposed fines of $100, $200, and $250 on the three impaired driving convictions, $100 on each of the two refusals, and $600 for the over .08 conviction, Bell's third in just over two years. He had been convicted of the same offence Nov. 30, 1976, in Vancouver and March 22, 1977, in Victoria and was fined $400 on each occasion.

Defence lawyer Josiah Wood of Vancouver said Bell suffered head injuries in a serious motor-vehicle accident in July, 1973, when he was unconscious for a week. About two months after, Wood continued, Bell developed an expansion of a damaged brain artery which nearly burst and an operation saved his life but resulted in brain damage.

More than five years after that accident, Wood said, Bell still had not returned to his normal "personality profile," suffering from fits of depression.

Bell also suffered head injuries in a fall at work in November, 1974. In that mishap, he suffered injuries resulting in permanent damage to his left eye and ear, affecting his balance.

Wood said a psychiatric report assessed Bell's prognosis as poor and said he would remain a "simple-minded individual."

Before handing out the fines, Ostler said it was a very difficult case.

"Seldom is there such an appalling situation as this before the courts," he said.

The judge described Bell's personal situation as tragic and pathetic, and said it would be difficult to strike a balance between compassion for a human being and the important consideration of the protection of the public.

He said it was a "shocking series of events which, prima facie, is deserving of a term of imprisonment."

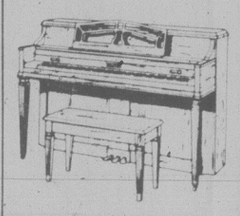

But he questioned what would result from a jail term. He said it wouldn't act as a deterrent to others and could only seriously exacerbate Bell's physical condition.

"This man, due to accidental injury, has suffered severe damage to his career and to his reasonable enjoyment of life in the future," Ostler observed.

He said the combination of alcohol and severe brain damage makes Bell unsuitable for driving. He said Bell behind the wheel of a car was "just as dangerous as a man with a loaded gun."

After imposing the fines, Ostler said he would recommend to the superintendent of motor-vehicles that Bell be suspended from driving for life or until a certificate can be produced to show he is medically fit to drive.

Cannabis carrier fined

A 24-year-old man was fined $1,500 in county court Tuesday for possession of one pound of cannabis resin for the purpose of trafficking in Victoria on Aug. 31, 1978.

Judge Montague Drake ordered Allen Fokkema to spend 90 days in jail if he defaults on paying the fine.

The cannabis, said to have been purchased for $1,000, was for private use and not for trafficking, said defence counsel Chris Considine. Fokkema was caught by the Narcotic Control Act definition of trafficking which includes transporting, which Considine said Fokkema was doing by taking it to two friends.

Dancers highlight Brigadoon

By AUDREY JOHNSON

Good and extensive use of an attractive corp de ballet; some neatly executed Highland dancing and the additional advantage of an efficient orchestra conducted by Howard Denike.

These are outstanding attributes in Brigadoon, the musical currently being presented by Victoria Operatic Society at McPherson Playhouse.

The choreography by Wendy Steen Thomas is graceful and quite versatile. She has blended in, without overdoing, Scottish country dance patterns, and has used her dancers expressively at key moments.

The action flows and a good tempo is maintained under Cliff Clarke's direction.

When he has acting skill to deal with, as is notably the case with Jennifer Corwin, Nan Long and Hugh Taylor, the pacing is good. The large chorus becomes straight-lined and four-squared every now and then, but otherwise responds well to events maintaining an animated and quite consistent ensemble effect.

They sing well too although precision suffers a little when they are off stage.

Male voices excel

Among the principals the male voices are better than the female. The highly tuneful Frederick Loewe score, however, generally does not fare too well with most of the cast.

Top honors vocally and histrionically belong to Nan Long as the man-hungry Meg Brockie. Hers is an animatedly funny, all-out yet focused performance that is also vocally charming and technically sound.

The interpretation of Jean, whose wedding day precipitates a crisis in the miraculous village of Brigadoon, is beautifully interpreted in dance sequences and small acting vignettes by Jennifer Corwin.

Fiona's is the key role, however. She is the 17th century village lass who falls in love with the strayed 20th century American, Tommy Albright; and he with her, despite the fact that the village only emerges in the Scotch highland mists for one day every 200 years.

Margaret Swinburne plays this role skimming the surface in rather an old-fashioned operetta style. She makes a pretty show without projecting any genuine emotion.

Vocally there is considerable strain in a voice that has a potential to please if inadequate breathing technique was overcome.

Dramatically speaking Hugh Taylor, Tommy's American friend, provides the smoothest, most watchable and believable performance among the men, in a non-singing part.

Emotions buried

Cliff Ridley as Tommy displays a basically fine light baritone which is flawed in production by technical failures. His stilted acting conveys little of the strong emotions involved.

More dramatic depth comes from Peter Cruise as Harry Beaton, Jean's rejected lover, and there is a sturdy and vocally resonant performance by John Gilliland as the all-knowing schoolmaster.

Lighting effects are good and set changes are made swiftly and silently. But the set designs leave something to be desired in the area of imagination. They are hard-edged and humdrum and do nothing to establish mood for this charming musical.

It is however, by virtue of its pluses in production and the romantic imagery of the Lerner-Loewe story and music, a pleasant way to spend an evening. Sell-out crowds have been finding that out and will doubtless continue to do so through its final night, Saturday.

Bastion bags Douglas Rain

RAIN

Top-ranked Canadian actor Douglas Rain will appear in Victoria early in the New Year.

Rain, internationally known, will be seen on stage at McPherson Playhouse in the principal role of Sidney Bruhl in Ira Levin's Deathtrap.

In his biggest scoop to date, Bastion Theatre's artistic director, Edwin Stephenson has contracted Rain for the Broadway success which will be staged here in February.

Rain's distinguished career includes playing 41 different roles in 45 Stratford Festival productions; among them Iago in Othello, and the title role in Macbeth.

On the international stage he was a Tony nominee for the role of Cecil in Vivat, Vivat, Regina! on Broadway, starred in the title role in Hadrian VII in London's West End and played in the American premiere of The Ruling Class.

Rain has made many appearances on the stages of Canada's regional theatres and has headed the English acting section of the National Theatre School in Montreal.

Symphony to sail through concert

The Victoria Symphony will present a little travelling music this weekend.

The orchestra has been on a swing through northern B.C. on its annual concert tour and returns Saturday aboard the Queen of Prince Rupert.

To wrap up the tour, its members will stage a concert aboard the ferry.

Six members of the orchestra's string section will give an afternoon concert that day in the dining lounge, as the steep forested mountains of the Inside Passage slide by outside.

They are concertmaster Derry Deane, his assistant Sue Eddlemon, violinists Ken Burward-Hoy and Adele Pierre and violas Scott Lewis and Leo Kokes.

"We got a lot of positive feedback from the passengers last year," said ferry spokesman Bill Bouchard, who calls it "symphony through the passage."

Gov't to change stumpage rate

The B.C. government will change the stumpage rates charged to interior forest operations as soon as possible to reflect current market conditions, Forests Minister Tom Waterland said Tuesday.

The stumpage, the price paid for standing trees, will be based on the lumber prices of the previous month rather than averaged out over the previous three months as is now the case, he said.

It includes the cost of logging, hauling and milling, stumpage revenue and provides for profit and risk factors.

"The new fee structure will help us on the up market and help industry on the down market, and be a more realistic price," the minister said.

Forest industry representatives have been asking the government for help during the current building slump brought about by high interest rates.

While agreeing the industry has been hit by the market slump Waterland is not overly sympathetic.

"When prices were going up over the past couple of years the industry was making good money because they were on a low stumpage compared to market prices. And strangely enough they never asked me to adjust it then," he said.

Waterland is also unsympathetic about the short-term layoffs ordered by two southern Vancouver Island forest companies next month.

"If they feel they have to shut down for a period of time to get markets back into balance, that's their business decision," he said.

At the same time he took a verbal swipe at one of the firms, Sooke Forest Products Ltd., for saying the government should give them a timber allocation.

"The government doesn't give timber allocations to anyone," he said. "They are received through competition."

Waterland said the company has been in business a long time and has seen many allocations disposed of through competition.

"Sooke Forest Products is part of the industry, part of the game. I guess either they never saw fit or were never capable of getting their timber allocation," he said.

He said he is trying to determine when the government's computer division, the B.C. Systems Corp., will be in a position to collect the information necessary for the one-month averaging out system for stumpage.

"I'm not sure just how quickly I can do that, but at some point in the not too distant future we will be doing it — whether it is this month, next month or this spring sometime," Waterland said.

A spokesman for the Northern Interior Lumber section of the Council of Forest Industries said a decision is needed before Dec. 1.

Waterland said this is because interior logging is done during the fall and "interior manufacturers are making decisions on whether to log now in the next few months or stop and wait for the stumpage price to come down and then start logging."

"That's why it is so critical to employment right now — because a log or no-log decision is being made. I've been monitoring this almost hourly for the last month."

Aid to lumber industry

OTTAWA (CP) — A frightened industry and its union cried for help Tuesday and went away with an assurance that the government will take the problems of wood workers seriously.

Five representatives each from the industry and the International Woodworkers of America met with Economic Development Minister Robert de Cotre, Labor Minister Lincoln Alexander and the senior minister from Vancouver, Postmaster-General John Fraser.

Prime Minister Joe Clark and Finance Minister John Crosbie were scheduled to attend but cancelled in favor of a longer-than-expected meeting with Alberta Premier Peter Lougheed on oil pricing.

Jack Munro, head of the 54,000-member union told reporters after the 90-minute meeting the ministers promised to brief Clark on the massive layoffs threatening the industry and to get back to him.

The cause is a slump in the housing industry which he attributed to high interest rates which have made mortgage money unaffordable.

"Our union is in favor of the mortgage interest tax deductibility plan but bringing it in gradually is too slow," he explained.

The plywood industry has already been hit with the sawmills expected to buckle under next followed by the spin-off jobs such as loggers, he said.

Alexander, the only minister to give an interview, said "we were given some very dramatic figures."

Meanwhile in Vancouver, an official of the International Woodworkers of America rushed to the defence of his members Tuesday following criticism of woodworkers by Don Lanskail, president of the Council of Forest Industries of British Columbia.

Lanskail said that worker carelessness and failure to follow instructions are the biggest causes of industrial accidents.

Foxcroft said Lanskail has very little knowledge of the working conditions of IWA members.

Strike leaves cancer victims in cold

LONDON (AP) — With three hours to go before Charing Cross Hospital would have run out of heating oil because of a strike, cancer patients threw blankets over their bathrobes and took to the streets.

Their mission was to convince 55 striking maintenance men to allow oil trucks through the picket lines. Without the fuel, Britain's foremost cancer clinic would have to close its doors.

"We told them we were cancer patients and were ashamed of what they were doing," Kathy Barker, a 37-year-old mother of two, said. "But they just turned their backs on us."

Mrs. Barker has cancer of the uterus.

One picket confessed he felt sorry for the patients, but Carol Bostwick, 42, who had surgery only a week ago, cried to him: "Obviously you're not sorry enough because our lives are still at stake."

Mrs. Bostwick had to have a nurse help her to stand, and another patient coughed up blood as he braved the cold with 200 white-coated doctors and nurses and pleaded with the pickets to end their five-week blockade.

Besides oil, supplies of oxygen, food and even light bulbs were running out. Patients were taking cold baths and, with the working staff, were eating leftovers to conserve the hospital's resources.

Three oil tanker trucks slipped past the pickets Tuesday night and gave the hospital enough fuel to last until the weekend. But whether this will end the strikers' stranglehold is not clear. The hospital needs 14 more deliveries to restore fuel reserves to normal.

In the Commons, Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher pledged any necessary action — including sending in troops — to see that supplies arrive.

"I think we are all appalled and repelled by the scenes outside Charing Cross Hospital," Mrs. Thatcher said. "They (the strikers) show a callous disregard for common humanity."

The dispute, like many in Britain, began with what seemed a minor incident. A maintenance man was dismissed after he refused to install an air filter in an operating room on the grounds that carrying it even by elevator was not part of his job. That resulted in a walkout by the engineering staff.

The Trades Union Congress, umbrella group for British unions, is urging the strikers to go back to work.

Doctors and nurses are keeping an around-the-clock "counter-picket" in an attempt to keep supplies coming. Nurses in starched white caps and dark blue capes huddled in the chilly darkness sipping steaming coffee on their picket line late Tuesday and again today. They cheered when the tanker trucks made it past the strikers.

Some angry hospital staff workers smashed the strikers' posters and destroyed their makeshift sleeping huts. The working staff and strikers regularly swapped taunts and jeers.

Zanuck's chance of recovery 'grim'

PALM SPRINGS, Calif. (UPI) — Movie mogul Darryl Zanuck, who slipped into a coma following a relapse in his fight with pneumonia, is still unconscious and his doctor says the outlook for recovery "is very grim."

Zanuck, 77, co-founder and former chairman of 20th Century-Fox, was admitted to Desert Hospital late last month and was reported in fair condition last week.

But Dr. Geroge Kaplan said Zanuck slipped into a coma last weekend and his condition was critical.

Zanuck ran the 20th Century-Fox studios with an iron hand for more than a third of a century and at one time was one of the highest paid executives in the country with an annual salary and dividends of more than $450,000.

He was ousted as board chairman in 1971 in a highly-publicized row with his son, Richard, over control of the studio.

Newborn baby given as gift

LONDON (AP) — A woman has given her newborn daughter to her childless twin sister, the Daily Mirror newspaper reported today.

The newspaper said that Lynda Elson, 30, and her husband, John, made their "priceless gift of love" because they already have two children.

The twin, Jean, who lives in the Shropshire County town of Market Drayton, is unable to have children and plans to adopt the baby.

"I was absolutely stunned, speechless by Lynda's sacrifice," she was quoted as saying.

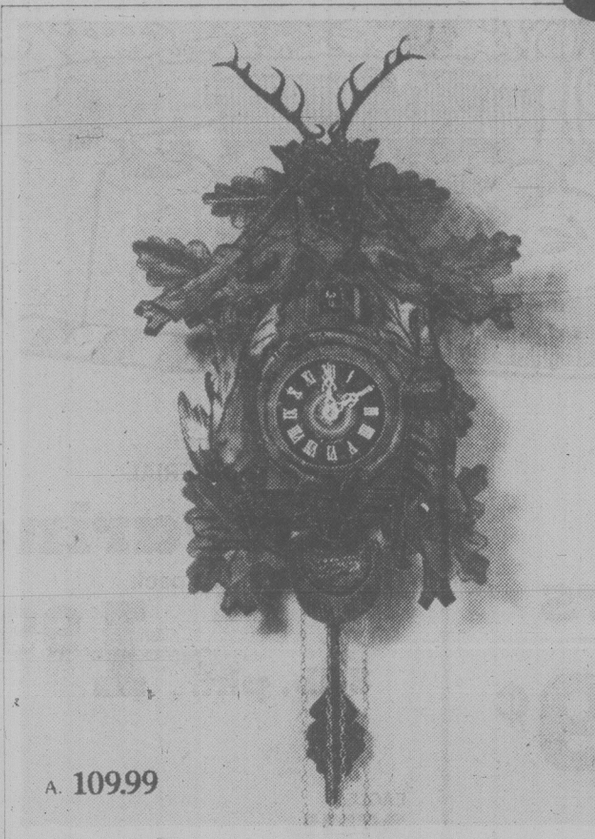

"Not in my wildest dreams could I imagine anyone making this kind of sacrifice for my happiness."

The Daily Mirror reported that the baby, Jodie, was born in a Shrewsbury hospital Oct. 5 and given by Mrs. Elson to her sister 30 minutes later.

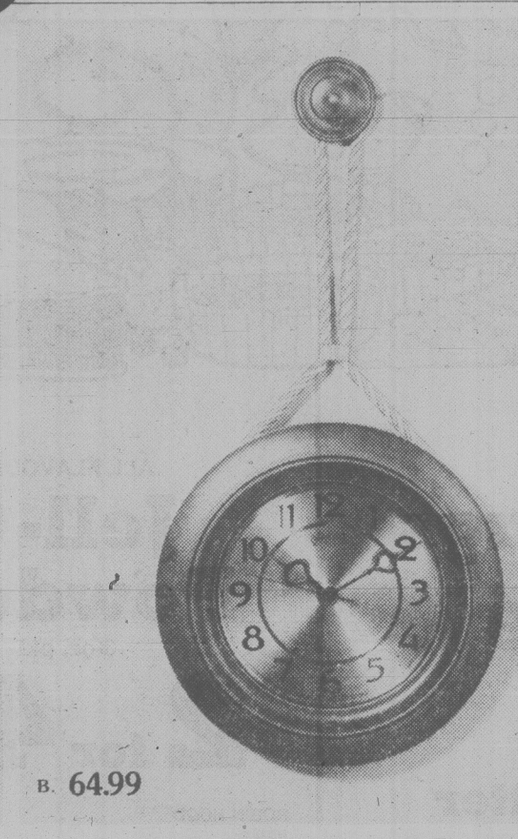

However, a spokesman for the National Adoption Society warned the proposed adoption might cause problems for the child.

"Naturally enough you could have a situation where the natural mother gets upset."

Soviets pare economic targets after shortfalls

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet parliament met today to approve reduced economic targets for next year after President Leonid Brezhnev disclosed that this year's grain harvest — the worst since 1975 — is 48 million tons short of its goal and oil output is off 10 million tons.

Because of the low harvest, Western specialists expect the Soviet government may buy all 25 million tons of corn and wheat the U.S. agriculture department will allow to be sold to the Soviet Union in the 1979-80 fiscal year.

The scaled-down economic plan, which is expected to be routinely approved by the 1,500 members of the Supreme Soviet, the Soviet Union's parliament, calls for industrial output to rise by 4.5 per cent in 1980.

The growth target for this year had been 5.7 per cent, but Soviet economists estimated growth for the year at about 4.2 per cent.

Nikolai Baibakov, chief of the state economic planning organization, presented to parliament a number of production targets for 1980, many of them lower than those envisaged in late 1975 when the Soviet Union announced its 1976-80 economic plan.

Baibakov said the oil production target for next year is 606 million tons, compared with the original goal of between 620 and 640 million tons. The steel production quota is 150 million tons, compared with the 160 to 170 million tons originally planned.

Baibakov said production in 1979 fell short of targets in steel, coal, oil, mineral fertilizers, synthetic chemicals, paper, non-ferrous metals and some consumer goods and food products.

Brezhnev confirmed earlier predictions of a poor harvest in a speech Tuesday to a closed session of the Communist party's 250-member central committee.

Tass, the official Soviet news agency, said Brezhnev told the committee 1979 was "perhaps the most difficult year" of the 1976-80 five-year planning period.

Brezhnev said the 1979 grain harvest totalled 178 million metric tons, 48 million below the target of 226 million. Oil output reached 585 million tons, lower than the goal of 595 million. Last year's harvest was a record 237.2 million tons, while oil output was 572 million tons.

The nation's top economic official, Premier Alexei Kosygin, has been out of public sight since Oct. 17 and is reported to be ill. His chief deputy, Nikolai Tikhonov, a 74-year-old economic planner, was elevated Tuesday to full membership in the governing politburo, presumably to help improve economic management.

Western analysts speculated that the move put Tikhonov in line for the premiership. But a senior Soviet official discouraged speculation that the change would be made during the current Supreme Soviet meeting.

Tikhonov's promotion brought the politburo back up to 14 members. The party central committee named Mikhail Gorbachev, the 48-year-old party secretary for agriculture, to replace Tikhonov as one of nine non-voting Politburo members.

POPE JOHN arrived in Turkey today to advance the cause of Christian unity, but a heavy security guard was called out after the Moslem country's media greeted the visit with hostility and a death threat was received. "Love is greater than danger," said the pontiff after stepping from his plane and kissing the red carpet that led from the plane's ramp to a military honor guard. He was met at Ankara airport by Turkish President Fahri Koruturk, Premier Suleyman Demirel, and other officials.

Wet, cold weather blamed for reduced Soviet harvest

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union announced Tuesday a 1979 grain harvest of 179 million metric tons, about 47 million tons short of the year's target figure and 58 million tons short of last year's record crop.

Figures were disclosed in a speech by President Leonid Brezhnev carried by the official Tass news agency.

The Soviet plan for grain production this year had called for the 226 million metric tons. Western agricultural analysts attribute the bad harvest to wet weather and a record cold winter.

So far, the Soviet Union has bought eight million metric tons of corn and 4.4 million of wheat from the United States for delivery in 1979-1980. A metric ton is about 2,205 pounds — equal to 39.4 bushels of corn or 36.7 bushels of wheat.

About 15.7 million metric tons of U.S. grain were shipped to the Soviet Union in 1978-79 and the United States has given Moscow permission to buy up to 25 million this year.

Brezhnev spoke at a plenary session of the Soviet Communist party central committee.

Brezhnev's figures would make this year's grain harvest the worst since 1975, when Soviet farmers produced only 140.1 million metric tons.

Western analysts also blame Soviet harvest difficulties on a lack of storage and drying equipment. More than 280 million acres were planted in grain this year.

"They have a storage problem and are very short on driers. This means you can knock the Soviet total down by 15 million to 20 million metric tons," one Western agriculture specialist said.

If that estimate is right, the total usable grain harvested this year would be between 159 million tons and 164 million tons.

Western specialists say that because of the low harvest, the Soviet Union may buy all the 25 million metric tons of corn and wheat that the U.S. agriculture department has allotted for sale to the Soviet Union in the 1979-80 period.

Soviet military spending cut

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union announced today that its military spending in 1980 will total 17.1 billion rubles, 100 million rubles less than this year's defence budget.

Finance Minister Vasily Garbuzov told a Soviet parliamentary session that the decrease — about six-tenths of one per cent — was "proof of the good will of the Soviet Union to significantly reduce international tension and embark upon true detente."

At the current official exchange rate, the 17.1 billion ruble military budget for next year will equal $26.2 billion. It amounts to six per cent of the total 1980 Soviet budget of 284.6 billion rubles, or $435.4 billion.

Western specialists say that published Soviet figures on defence spending are deceptively low because many military costs are hidden in other budget appropriations. In addition, it is not known how much individual pieces of military equipment actually cost the Kremlin in ruble terms.

The U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency says actual Soviet military outlays in 1977 were estimated at about $140 billion calculated on the basis of what the Soviet Union's equipment and personnel would cost in the United States.

Donald Burton, chief of the CIA's military economic division, said this month that during the past nine years the Soviet Union has outspent the United States by $300 billion in over all defence activities.

N-war false alarm cause 'corrected'

WASHINGTON (Reuter) — The Pentagon said on Tuesday that it had discovered and corrected the cause of a false alarm that put part of the North American defence network into a nuclear war alert for six minutes on Nov. 9.

Twelve jet fighters were sent up from U.S. and Canadian bases when it was wrongly reported that a Russian missile was approaching.

Thomas Ross, a spokesman for the defence department, said the cause of the accident had been discovered and action had been taken "to make sure it can't happen again."

He declined to give more details, but Pentagon officials said the incorrect signal was caused when a test tape was fed inadvertently into the main alert computer system.

The officials said that if it had continued for another minute or two, or if other indicators such as radar and satellites had confirmed the warning of an attack, President Carter and Defence Secretary Harold Brown would have been notified.

Pentagon officials could not say whether the test tape, intended for a military alert exercise, was fed into the main computer because of a human error or a technical problem.

The officials said the fighters that took to the air were programmed to do so automatically should an alert be flashed to their bases in Missouri, Oregon and British Columbia.

They said no nuclear-equipped planes took off in the six minutes.

Military officers responsible for assessing the alarm assumed it was false since there was no confirmation from other monitoring sources, the officials said.

Shark attacks Oregon man

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Twenty-six-year-old surfer Kenny Doudt of Reedsport, Ore., was in serious condition at a Portland hospital late Tuesday after undergoing two hours of surgery on shark bite wounds.

A hospital spokesman said Doudt was in critical condition when he was brought in with wounds to his chest and abdomen suffered when he was attacked while surfing at Cannon Beach on the northern Oregon coast.

A companion, Jack Bird, said he heard Doudt yell and then saw a shark at least three metres long attack Doudt. Cannon Beach Fire Chief Gary Moon said Doudt's surfboard appeared to have teeth marks more than 30 centimetres across in it.

Duncan Law, research director at the Oregon State University Seafoods Laboratory in Astoria, Ore., said several types of man-eating sharks inhabit Pacific Northwest coastal waters but attacks on humans are extremely rare.

Several species of sharks known to be dangerous to man have been seen in the area.

Bird said the shark thrashed around with Doudt in its mouth.

"The shark was pushing at Kenny and his tail was thrashing back and forth on top of the water," he said. "I started paddling and looked back, but couldn't see very much because water was splashing all over."

He said the shark then let go and Doudt was able to pull himself onto his surfboard and reach shore.

When is a father really a father?

BRIDGETON, N.J. (UPI) — A New Jersey judge has ruled that a man who gave sperm to his former girlfriend, who artificially inseminated herself with it, should have his name listed on the baby's birth certificate as its natural father.

The decision, reached privately last month by Superior Court Judge Steven Kleiner but not released to the public until Tuesday, is the latest in a series of rulings stemming from the 1977 case of a man seeking the right to declare himself the legal father of the child.

The man wanted to ensure that his son would not have to go through life with a birth certificate that said "father unknown."

In the original case before Superior Court Judge Frank Testa in 1977, it was revealed that the man and woman wanted to have a child but did not want to have sexual relations because they were not married.

Kleiner said the man provided his sperm to the woman three times, and she used a glass syringe to inseminate herself. The child was born in 1976, the judge said, but the couple's relationship later "fell apart."

The man first filed suit to be named the legal father, then sued to be granted visitation rights.

In the most recent suit, filed in May in regard to the father's name on the child's birth certificate, the judge said the man wanted to provide medical insurance.

Future economic viability of tar sands uncertain

By ANTHONY J. PARISI
New York Times

FORT McMURRAY, Alta. — In this tar sands region, Canadians are developing a synthetic fuels industry like the type many energy specialists expect the United States to adopt. Many, but not all.

To a growing number of skeptics, Fort McMurray may be a ghost town in the making. They worry that the cost to produce synthetic fuels, generally prohibitive now, may well remain so despite the rising price of conventional oil. If so, Fort McMurray — and indeed all economic interests that tie their future to synthetic fuels — could wind up in serious trouble.

Each day, 4,500 people, a sixth of Fort McMurray's rapidly growing population and the overwhelming share of its breadwinners, commute a half-hour outside this isolated northern community to mine oil. When all goes well, these surface operations yield 130,000 barrels a day from the tar-coated grains of sand found in this petroleum-producing province.

This year, Alberta's tar sands will account for more than 6 per cent of Canada's total crude oil production, and the proportion seems to be growing fast. Spurred by government tax concessions, both the Suncor plant, the pioneering one that began 10 years ago as Great Canadian Oil Sands, and Syncrude, the much bigger operation that started up last year, are expanding output. Their combined production capacity is expected to approach 190,000 barrels a day within three years.

A third operation, called Alsands, has won all but final government approval. By 1986, it is supposed to start churning out an additional 140,000 barrels a day nearby. (A fourth operation is planned at Cold Lake, about 150 miles to the south, but this installation will recover tar sands far below the surface.)

With conventional crude oil production apparently on the decline in Canada, the three surface plants alone could account for a fourth of this country's total oil output when they are fully operational in the latter 1980's. And enthusiasts hope that as many as a dozen tar sands plants will be in operation by the end of the century.

But as Canadians gain experience with the task of uncovering the tar sands deposits, stripping away the oil and returning the remains to the gaping holes left behind, some are beginning to have second thoughts.

"You can't help but wonder about it when you hear what these plants cost," Ted Mason, chairman of the Fort McMurray New Town Board, said while driving a visitor to the tar sands operations. "For our sake, we just hope all this money is paying off."

Right now, no one really knows. The Suncor operation, which can turn out 45,000 barrels a day now and will be expanded to produce up to 58,000 barrels a day, reported a net profit of $19 million in Canadian currency last year. That, however, merely reduced its cumulative deficit after 10 years of operation to $35.3 million.

On the strength of this year's explosion in crude oil prices — oil from tar sands is now exempt from Canadian price controls — the operation has finally broken into the black, according to a spokesman for Suncor Inc., the Canadian affiliate of the Sun Company that earlier this year absorbed this once quasi-independent tar sands operation. But it is uncertain how long it will take the tar sands operation to recover the money invested.

Even with the recent price run-up and the special tax allowances, industry analysts say the newer and far costlier Syncrude plant also faces a long road to the break-even point.

Including the 260-megawatt power plant that had to be built for the sprawling surface mine and its monstrous recovery equipment, Syncrude, which now produces 85,000 barrels a day but is licensed to go as high as 129,000, cost $2.5 billion.

Proponents argue that the huge capital cost of tar sands and other synthetic fuel plants — such as the shale oil and coal conversion operations proposed for the United States — are well worth it. Once the plants are turning out a steady stream of fuel, they say, production costs should hold fairly steady, thus putting a lid on oil and gas prices.

So far, nothing of the sort has happened. Not only have projected capital costs risen with inflation, but so have operating costs.

Last year, the cost to produce a barrel of oil at the Suncor plant, excluding income taxes, corporate overhead, interest and some incidental labor expenses, was 2½ times what it was in 1969, when the plant produced its first barrel of oil.

In an interview, Brent Scott, president of Syncrude Canada Ltd. (a consortium of a half-dozen private companies plus the Alberta government and Petro-Canada, the Canadian national oil company), projected Syncrude's direct operating costs at between $15 and $20 a barrel.

But that, he added, did not include taxes, royalties, depreciation, interest and profit. The consortium does not treat these costs jointly. Presumably, after taking these into account, Syncrude loses money, as its oil sells for about $25 a barrel, or not much more than the operating costs alone.

Critics believe Syncrude's production costs will keep climbing largely because recovering oil from tar sands, like wringing it from shale or coal, is itself a ravenous consumer of energy.

Ironically, they reason, the rising cost of energy is the culprit that will push tar sands production costs ever higher.

In all, the Syncrude people say it takes the energy equivalent of half a barrel of oil to produce a barrel of its synthetic crude. By contrast, the energy gain from a conventional oil well is perhaps 100 to one.

1985 oil profits 10 times '74 level

TORONTO (CP) — A University of British Columbia economist has forecast that oil industry profits will have gone up a staggering 1,000 per cent by 1985 from 1974's level.

John Helliwell told the Canadian Tax Foundation that the increase "would represent an unparalleled shift in economic power in Canada."

The transfer of such large volumes of profits to the oil industry is even more disturbing because the oil industry is 80 per cent foreign-owned and 90 per cent foreign-controlled, he said.

"This means that by the mid-1980s, the foreign-owned firms producing oil and gas in Canada will be either repatriating large flows of dividends, or acquiring large new Canadian investments outside the non-conventional oil and gas-producing sector."

Helliwell suggested a provincial revenue-sharing plan to deal with regional inequalities caused by high energy prices.

He said energy costs "are putting an extrordinary strain on Canadian fiscal federalism," and Alberta's oil revenue especially could put an additional burden on the present equilization systems.

New tax shelter in hopper cars?

CALGARY (CP) — Investors who are bored with the extensive tax breaks available in oil drilling funds and Canadian movie productions may soon have a new place to put their money — hopper cars.

General manager Wally Madill of Alberta Wheat Pool told reporters Tuesday that the pool has asked Ottawa to create tax incentives for investment in the railway "hopper cars" that carry grain.

With the shortage of modern railway equipment to move grain, he said, investment in hopper cars would be a good thing for Ottawa to encourage — "what better place is there?"

The federal, Alberta and Saskatchewan governments are buying thousands of the cars for railways to use and the Canadian wheat board is using farmers' money to buy 2,000 more, but pool officials say even more cars are needed to fully exploit grain export opportunities.

The railway grain fleet at the beginning of this year consisted of 14,000 aging boxcars, suffering attrition of 1,800 boxcars a year, and 8,000 government-owned hopper cars, a rounded tank-type car that carries 90 to 100 tonnes and is designed to be easily unloaded.

Holy Crow! Farmers face a traumatic experience

By GARRY FAIRBAIRN

CALGARY (CP) — Representatives of 57,000 Alberta farmers are moving toward possibly traumatic reconsideration of their lifelong worship of the Holy Crow.

A fundamental article of faith for generations of Prairie farm groups, the Crowsnest Pass statutory limits on grain freight rates, generally called "the Crow," have often earned the adjective "holy" in recognition of their previous political untouchability.

To the railways, however, the obligation to move grain at 1922 rates is an unholy financial burden that prevents them from buying modern equipment. That argument has won some sympathy from Ottawa, Alberta and Manitoba for Crow rate changes.

Despite mounting grain-handling problems and lost export sales due to deteriorating rail facilities, Prairie farm co-operatives maintained a solid front of opposition to any changes in Crow rates until last year, when president James Deveson of Manitoba Pool Elevators expressed willingness to see the rate increased.

"If we can be assured of better service then I think we should pay for it," Devenson said, sparking a storm of regional controversy and accusations of betrayal.

Saskatchewan Wheat Pool officials maintained solid public loyalty to the Crow rates, though participating in private discussions on how the railways could be given more money for carrying grain.

Next week, delegates to the annual meeting of Alberta Wheat Pool are to consider a recommendation from their board of directors to revise previous policy on Crow rates and grain transportation generally.

"We are making some recommendations that hopefully will clarify the policy, make it more concise, with some I would say relatively minor changes in Alberta Pool policy," president A.J. Macpherson told reporters Tuesday.

Details would be announced next week, although "if the delegates reject the directors' recommendations, why, we won't have anything to announce."

Other pool officials predicted a lively discussion during next week's private sessions of the two-week convention.

Alberta Pool, they said, appears to be in a sense balanced between the public rigidity of Saskatchewan Pool and the greater flexibility of Manitoba Pool.

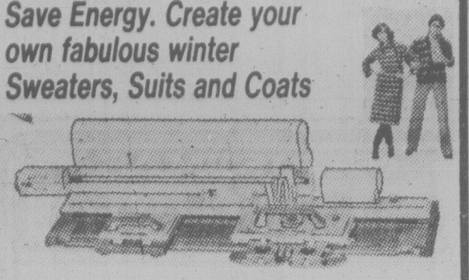

Alberta farmers, one official said, could afford to bear a larger share of rail costs for grain.

But, especially in view of the danger of setting a precedent with just one increase in the Crow rate, farmers would want virtually iron-clad assurances of better service, plus continuing federal subsidies in some form.

"Right now, the passengers who travel in VIA Rail pay less of the cost than farmers do for grain," the official said.

The federal Snaveley commission determined last year that in 1977 farmers paid 32 per cent of the cost of moving grain, Ottawa paid 18 per cent through various subsidies, and the railways absorbed 50 per cent of the cost. Dollar figures that year were $115 million, $64 million and $175 million respectively.

Calgary pushing heart treatment

CALGARY (CP) — The city's three major hospitals are spending millions of Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund dollars to improve facilities to treat heart diseases.

Foothills Hospital also announced that it has hired Dr. Eldon Smith, now at Dalhousie University in Halifax, to become director of the division of cardiology.

Dr. Clarence Guenther, director of the Foothills' department of medicine, said: "The programs that are planned or under way are needed very much. This city has many gaps in the treatment of heart disease."

Calgary's heart treatment facilities lag behind those in Edmonton and other centres, he said.

The new programs include a $4-million cardiovascular investigation laboratory at the Foothills, an $800,000 outpatient cardiac rehabilitation program at Calgary General Hospital and a $1.6-million catherization laboratory at Holy Cross Hospital.

Edmonton losing as gate to north

EDMONTON (CP) — Edmonton's stature as a gateway to the north declined in the last decade and requires immediate attention, states a report to city council.

A major study should be conducted that would recommend ways to fix the situation, says the report from the city's business development department.

The Alberta capital is lagging behind other cities and British Columbia in the race to promote northern development, it says.

"Unfortunately, other provinces such as British Columbia have initiated a substantial increase in these efforts to achieve influence in the north.

"As a result, by comparison, Alberta and specifically Edmonton have lost ground to this initiative."

Prairie oil boom - in sunflowers farming report

by leo quigley

In the vicinity of Nimes in southern France a traveller will find field after field of flowers, grown to supply fragrance to the perfume industry. The sea of color is a delight to the senses — far removed from the golden wheat fields of the Canadian prairies.

But the summer landscape of Canada's midwest is changing. Travellers expecting to find yesterday's fields of wheat, barley and oats stretching to the horizons will now find a sea of brilliant yellow rapeseed, islands of white buckwheat and harbors of blue flax blossoms encroaching on King Wheat.

In southern Manitoba and southeast Saskatchewan, there are miles of sunflowers nodding between fields of corn.

Canada is a long way from being one of the world's major producer of sunflowers, but this picturesque crop has expanded from 70,000 acres in the last 1960s to about 420,000 acres this year. In the United States, over 4 million acres of sunflowers were planted this year — double that of 1978.

In fact, sunflowers now are the second largest oil-producing crop in the world. The Soviet Union is the largest grower, followed by Argentina and the U.S.

The reasons behind the phenomenal growth of sunflower acreage in North America are the development of disease-resistant, high-yielding hybrids; the popularity of sunflower oil in Europe; and a growing demand for that product in Canada and the U.S.

Although Canada cannot boast leadership in production, she recently scored a world first by producing the first margarine made totally from sunflower seed oil.

In the past, margarines contaning sunflower seed oil have been blended with palm or corn oil. The recent introduction of the new margarine marked one of the few times when a brand name has been introduced to consumers from western Canada instead of from central Canada, Britain or the U.S.

At the unveiling of the new product, a spokesman for CSP Foods Ltd. said production of the margarine will take the seeds grown from about 20,000 acres of Manitoba's sunflower acreage this year.

Ken Sarsons, chief executive officer for CSP, said, "The sunflower will begin to command respect in North America as a premium oil seed . . . and take on some of the economic benefits that the oil has had for a couple of generations in Europe. As that happens, the attractions of sunflowers for farmers will increase substantially."

The new product is a soft-type margarine rating 10 to 15 per cent higher in polyunsaturates than leading corn oil margarines, with a low salt content — in the 2 per cent range. In addition, it uses Vitamin E derived from wheat germ as a natural preservative.

With aggressive marketing in Canada, backed by the strides that are being made in the U.S., the outlook for sunflowers on the prairies looks as bright as the flower itself.

Grain production takes 20% drop

WINNIPEG (CP) — Total production of the six major grains in Western Canada this year dropped about 20 per cent to 30.1 million tonnes, United Grain Growers said Tuesday.

In its final crop report of the year, the farmer co-operative said rapeseed made the most significant decline to 3.1 million tonnes. Total rapeseed production a year ago was 3.4 million tonnes.

Total spring wheat production is down 21 per cent, due mostly to yield reductions to an average of 23.9 bushels an acre from 29.6 bushels in 1978.

The co-operative estimated red spring wheat production at 14.3 million tonnes while durum wheat output was 1.8 million, oats two million, barley 7.3 million, rye 447,000, flax 835,000 and rapeseed 3.1 million.

The commission said 41 per cent of the red spring wheat is expected to grade No. 1 Canada western compared with just 30 per cent a year ago. Protein content also is expected to be higher.

Last laugh to builder as 70-ton problem finally floated away

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — The problem was not one faced by your average do-it-yourself handyman.

The problem was how to get the boat built in a backyard down to the river, and shove it in, when the boat weighed 70 tons; was 30 metres long, as long as a 10-storey building is tall; and nine metres wide, wider than the road to the river, 16 kilometres away.

"Took me 3½ years to build it," Tom Meanley said. "The neighbors laughed. They joked about whether I knew something they didn't, whether what I was building was another Noah's ark.

"What a sweet sight it was when she slid into the Mississippi, and floated. It was a proud moment, I'll tell you."

The boat Tom Meanley built in his backyard was the Memphis Queen III, a stern-wheeler, a steel-hulled replica of the grand old packet steamers of Mississippi legend and song.

It is three decks tall, snow-white trimmed in saloon red, with ironwork as lacy as a French negligee.

"My pride and joy," says Meanley, a native Californian with a degree in engineering who built some dock barges, learned to weld, built a 12-metre tugboat and a 20-metre trawler before deciding on the Memphis Queen.

"All I built of the Memphis Queen III in the backyard were the hull and first deck," he said. "I finished her afloat.

"I was prepared to cut the hull in pieces and reassemble it at the river, but I found a house mover who said he could cart the whole thing. I tell you, it was a sight you don't soon forget.

"First we had to cut a wide swath through some timber to get to the road. We bulldozed a turn in the road. We scraped the traffic signs on both sides and knocked down some overhanging branches, but we finally got to the four-lane highway.

"We took up three lanes and the shoulder. Picture it. Here comes a huge boat down the highway leading a long line of backed-up traffic. You should have seen the heads turn."

In the summer of last year, Memphis Queen III in all its gaudy glory was finished and ready for action.

Court ruling on birds a feather in cap of U.S. wildlife groups

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Supreme Court Tuesday unanimously ruled that the government may ban the sale of feathers that were lawfully taken years ago from birds, including eagles, that are now protected species.

In a victory for the government and wildlife groups, Justice William Brennan, wrote for the high court that the "sweepingly framed" Eagle Protection Act "plainly must be read" as the secretary of interior interpreted it.

The act, which has protected the bald eagle since 1940 and the golden eagle since 1962, makes it unlawful to "take, possess, sell, purchase, barter, offer to sell, purchase or barter, transport, export or import" protected birds.

Interior Department regulations enforcing that act and the Migratory Bird Treaty Act had been challenged by a group of owners, dealers and appraisers of American Indian artifacts, which include the feathers of various birds.

Those regulations allowed the possession and transportation without federal permit of birds acquired before they fell under federal protection, but barred the sale or barter or exchange of those birds or bird parts.

A three-judge lower court, noting there were "grave doubts" these acts would be constitutional if applied to birds taken before the laws were passed, voided the regulations. It said the laws did not apply to "pre-existing legally obtained bird parts or products therefrom . . ."

"It is reasonable for Congress to conclude that the possibility of commercial gain presents a special threat to the preservation of the eagles because that prospect creates a powerful incentive both to evade statutory prohibitions against taking birds."

The court also held that the Migratory Bird Treaty Act, originally enacted in 1918, "empowers the secretary of interior to bar commercial transactions in covered bird parts."

Introducing . . . A New Victoria Tradition

By ARLIE STRAW

Take three large helpings of music by the Victoria Symphony. Add the Victoria Choral Society, with all your favorite Christmas carols. Mix in the golden voice of Peter Chipman and some talented dancers in a delightful excerpt from the Nutcracker Ballet. Toss in narration by Barry Bowman, the famous "morning mayor" of C-FAX 1070 . . . and what have you got?

You have the best possible beginning for Christmas 1979! Three beautifully packaged Christmas Concerts at the Royal, with the best of good holiday wishes from C-FAX and the Symphony.

Concert times are at 8 p.m. on December 14 and 15, and at 2:30 Sunday the 16th. And tickets are on sale now at the MacPherson Box Office, Hillside Mall, "Cards and Things" in Sidney and Brandywine in Hatley Park Mall.

But here is the best part of the whole Victoria Christmas Program. Net proceeds go to the C-FAX/SAFEWAY Santas Anonymous Fund. Last year, this fund provided forty generous "Christmas Food Hampers" for needy families in the Greater Victoria area. This year, C-FAX 1070 and the Victoria Symphony hope to at least double that figure. And with your help, they can!

Give Yourself a Treat Clear Conscience Cookies

Everyone "over-indulges" at Christmas. Well, almost everyone. It's part of the fun. But if all those rich cookies and cakes have your conscience in tizzy, try some of these recipes. They're just as easy on the taste buds as they are on the tummy.

SESAME FRUIT BALLS (uncooked)

Grind together one-half pound pitted dates, one-half pound dried apricots and one-third cup seedless raisins. A few drops of lemon juice "to taste" doesn't go amiss either. Mix well and shape into small balls. These are a bit sticky, so roll them well in sesame seeds, or chopped coconut, or your favorite chopped nut mix.

NUT COOKIES

2 eggs, separated
½ cup honey
1 cup nuts, ground
6 tablespoons wholewheat flour
¼ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon ginger

Beat egg yolks till thick. Beat honey in gradually. Blend in nuts, flour, salt and ginger. Fold in stiffly beaten egg whites. (NOTE: Dough should be stiff.) Drop by teaspoon onto oiled cookie sheet and bake about ten minutes at 180 degrees C (350°F).

FILBERT COOKIES (flourless)

3 cups filberts or other ground nuts
2 eggs
½ cup honey
¼ teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon pure vanilla extract

Blend all ingredients thoroughly. Chill for three hours. Roll into small balls and arrange on oiled cookie sheet. Bake at 165 degrees C (325°F) about 15 minutes.

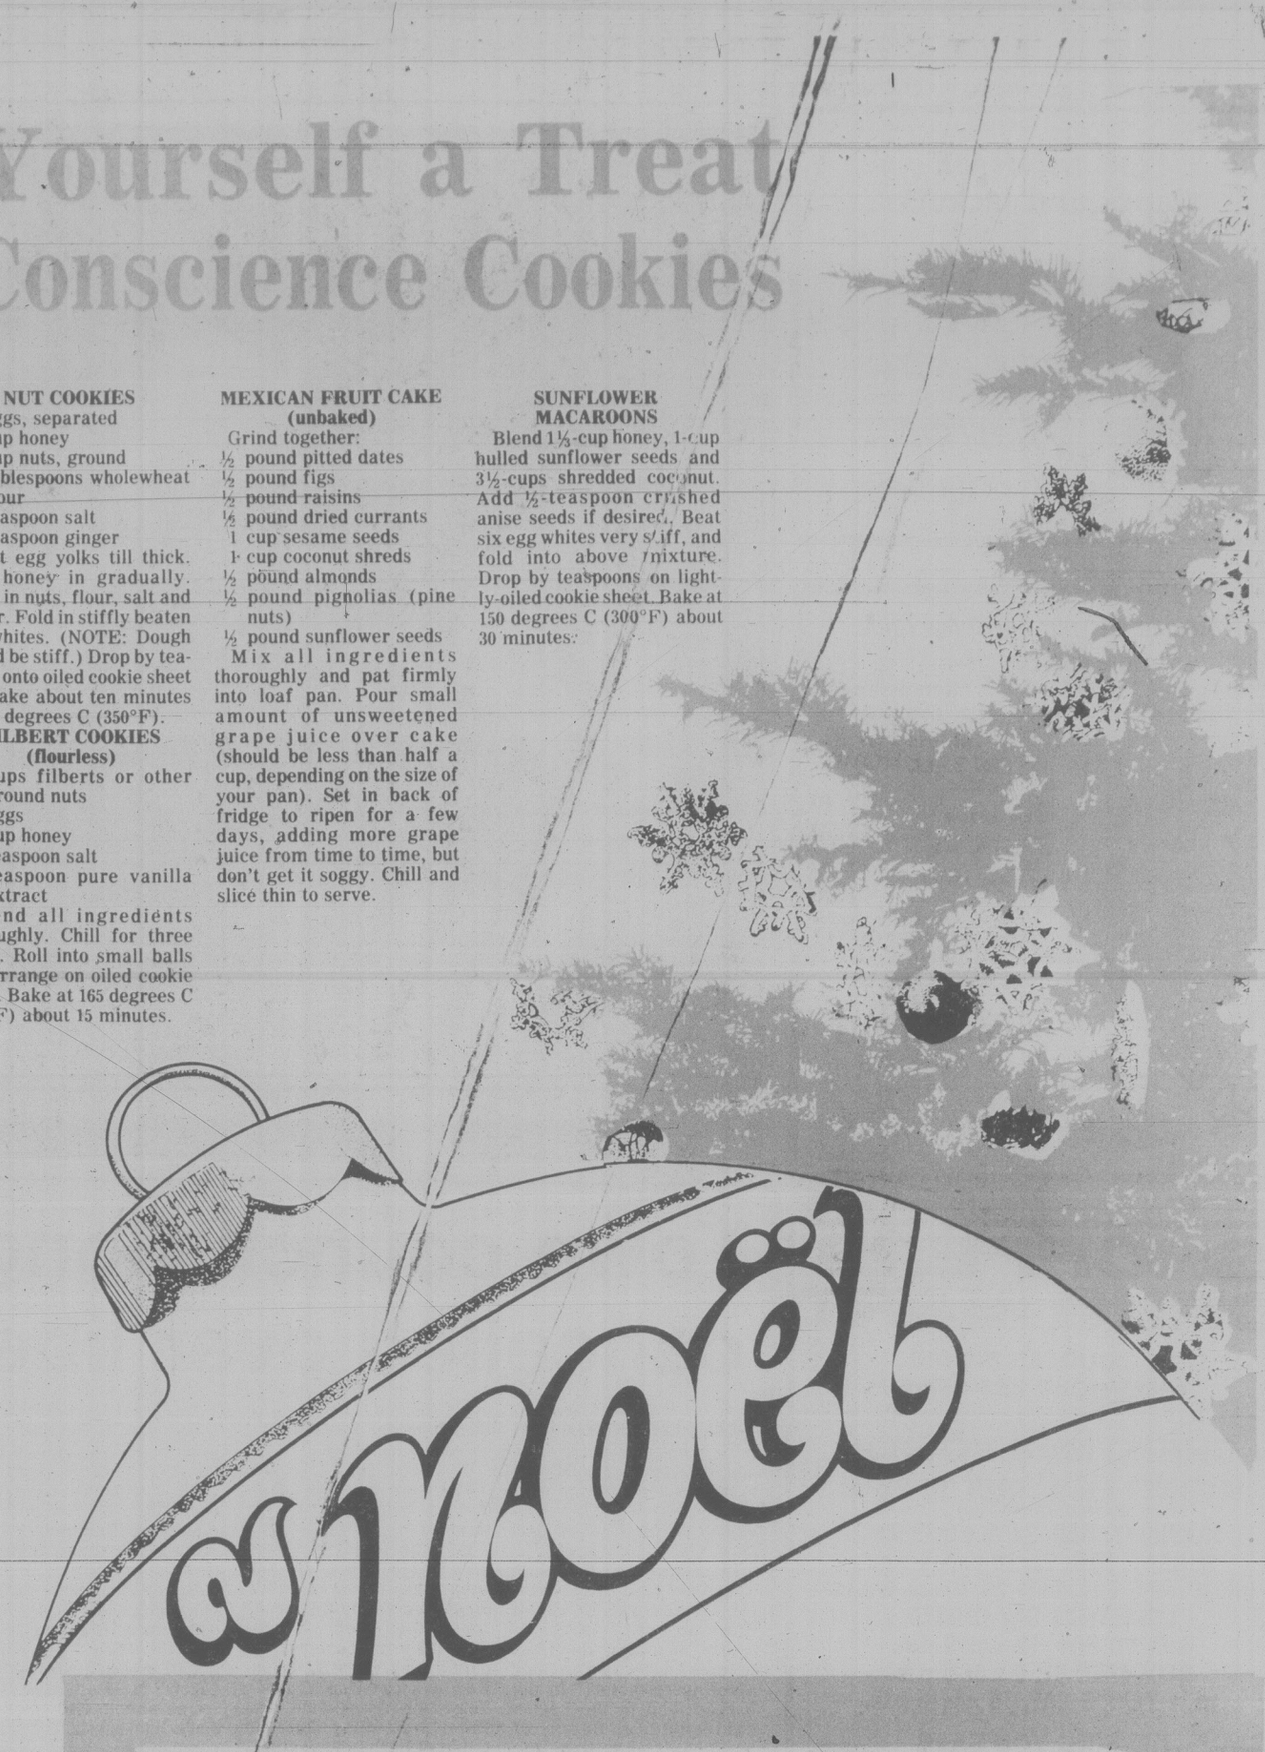

MEXICAN FRUIT CAKE (unbaked)

Grind together:
½ pound pitted dates
½ pound figs
½ pound raisins
½ pound dried currants
1 cup sesame seeds
1 cup coconut shreds
½ pound almonds
½ pound pignolias (pine nuts)
½ pound sunflower seeds

Mix all ingredients thoroughly and pat firmly into loaf pan. Pour small amount of unsweetened grape juice over cake (should be less than half a cup, depending on the size of your pan). Set in back of fridge to ripen for a few days, adding more grape juice from time to time, but don't get it soggy. Chill and slice thin to serve.

SUNFLOWER MACAROONS

Blend 1⅓-cup honey, 1-cup hulled sunflower seeds and 3½-cups shredded coconut. Add ½-teaspoon crushed anise seeds if desired. Beat six egg whites very stiff, and fold into above mixture. Drop by teaspoons on lightly-oiled cookie sheet. Bake at 150 degrees C (300°F) about 30 minutes.

Santas Anonymous

By ARLIE STRAW

Yes, Victoria. There is a Santa Claus. But not for ALL your children.

Do you know them . . . those children Santa doesn't visit? Marilyn Cann does. Last year, there were 800 of them on her "Santa's Anonymous" gift list. This year, the list is even longer.

They don't ask for much, these children of the poor. A toy, perhaps . . . or a doll. A game, or a warm sweater, or a teddy bear to love. The people at Santas Anonymous try to fill as many requests as they can. But there are so many names. And so little time.

Will you help? There are no dues for Santas Anonymous members. It doesn't take up much time. It certainly doesn't cost much money. Just phone C-FAX/SAFEWAY Santas Anonymous at 477-8511 and ask Marilyn what she needs. Or tune in to the Paul Mann Show on C-FAX 1070 any weekday from ten till two, and listen for the "Santas Anonymous" gift list.

Then take your wrapped gift to the nearest neighborhood Safeway Store, and put it in the "Santas Anonymous" gift box. The Moonlight Van Club and other dedicated volunteers will take it from there.

Santas Anonymous . . . 477-8511. The nicest gift you can give this Christmas.

Christmas Tales from Victoria's Past

By RICH MOLE

In a world full of overnight international crisis, TV "second seasons" and here today, gone-tomorrow fashions, we usually think of Christmas celebration as something very old, a religious and merry-making festival steeped in tradition. But, insofar as the book of history is written, Christmas on the Pacific Northwest coast began just a page or two back. The officers and crew of the Boston fur-trade vessel The Columbia inaugurated the Yuletide in this area just one hundred and eighty-eight year ago.

Captain Robert Grey — fearful of meeting the Spanish further up the coast at Nootka — decided that a small cove on Meares Island would provide a good Winter haven. In short order, a sturdy two-storey building was constructed and christened "Fort Defiance". As a reward for their efforts, the Captain announced a Christmas celebration.

Hunters brought back dozens of geese, ducks and teal, which were soon turning on a tiered spit constructed especially for the purpose. Ship's kegs of wine and rum were opened, and the cook offered up a tart huckleberry pudding for dessert. Eager to avoid any trouble in the furrich area, the Captain invited Chief Wickaninash and his men to join the festivities. The Indian women stayed where they were . . . in the canoes!

It had been a long five-month voyage for Robert Melrose and the others, before they sighted Fort Victoria early in 1852. He and the rest were beginning their five-year service to the Hudson's Bay Company as Craigflower farmers. For these new immigrants, the formal Yuletide celebrations included a theatrical play and Ball inside the Fort, and other, much less formal celebrations outside its walls.

"New Year's Day," wrote Melrose in his diary, "a day above all days for rioting in drunkenness, then what are we to expect of this young, but desperate colony of ours, where dissipation is carried on to such extremities . . . my readers will be expecting to find nothing in my Almanack from Christmas 'til past the New Year, but such a one drunk and another drunk and so on . . . the grog shops were drained of every sort of liquour, not a drop to be got for either love or money . . ."

For the more devout, the Fort was the center of Reverend Robert Staines' Divine Service, held (as were marriages and funerals) in the Mess-hall. Colony Catholics had to make do with Father Lamfpet's self-made shanty on what is now Courtney Street.

By the mid 1850s, with more families arriving, Christmas took on a less haphazard feeling. And, after the gold-rush boom, less than twenty years after James Douglas chose the site of his future fort, the Colonist recorded the new look for Christmas.

"The Streets presented quite an animated appearance. The day was unusually pleasant. Many ladies and gentlemen were engaged in making their holiday purchases or in viewing the fine displays of seasonable articles in the stores. We notice only a very few drunken persons about and it is a noticeable fact that not a single arrest was made by the police . . ."

Civilized, indeed!

Christmas cooking tastes better with real Dairy Products.

WALNUT YOGURT RING

1 cup walnuts, divided
¾ cup butter
1 cup sugar, divided
2 eggs
1 (200 ml) container plain yogurt
1 teaspoon grated lemon peel
1 teaspoon vanilla
2 cups sifted all purpose flour
1½ teaspoons baking powder
½ teaspoon soda
1 teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon cinnamon

Chop walnuts coarsely. Cream butter with ¾ cup sugar, until light and fluffy. Beat in eggs, one at a time, until well blended. Stir in yogurt, lemon peel and vanilla.

Resift flour with baking powder, soda and salt. Add to creamed mixture stirring until smooth. Add ¾-cup walnuts. Turn half batter into greased and floured 9 inch pan.

Mix remaining ¾ cup sugar with cinnamon; sprinkle over batter. Top with remaining batter, sprinkle with remaining ¼ cup walnuts.

Bake below oven centre in moderate oven, 350 degrees F., about 1 hour, until cake tests done. Cool 10 minutes, remove from pan. Drizzle with sugar glaze made by combining glaze ingredients.

Town council Gong Show cancelled over libel fears

CAMPBELLFORD, Ont. (CP) — It used to be the most popular television show in town — right up there with Happy Days, Eight isEnough and The Dukes of Hazzard.

But a local cable television operator says he's been forced to cancel his taped broadcasts of Campbellford council meetings, which had become known as The Gong Show everywhere from the barber shop to the Legion canteen and in dozens of households ever since the sessions began last February.

Brian Redden, owner of Redden's Cable TV, did more than anger his cable subscribers in this town of 2,300 about 40 kilometres east of Peterborough.

He put the spotlight on a strange little loophole in Ontario libel and slander law that could mean ruin for dozens of cable companies across the province.

Redden decided to cancel after Campbellford Mayor Bill Baker, a lawyer, threatened to sue two of his councillors and two newspaper reporters over two separate incidents that arose during council meetings.

"I'm not intimidated," Redden claims, "but we're not going to stick our necks out."

Redden says he has more to fear from lawsuits than ordinary broadcasters and newspaper reporters — even though he was broadcasting only unedited tapes.

And according to the major cable television associations, he has every reason to worry.

The law simply does not give cable operators the same right to report public meetings without fear of lawsuits enjoyed by commercial broadcasters, according to both the 300-member Canadian Cable Television Association and the 115-member Ontario Cable Telecommunications Association.

Technically, cable operators do not broadcast — their programming is available only to subscribers — so they do not fit into the legal definition of broadcasting.

Although many companies — large and small — like to broadcast local council meetings to fulfil community programming requirements spelled out in their licences, more and more are becoming nervous about it, says Bill Allen, spokesman for the Canadian Cable Television Association.

"It's a frightening, intimidating situation for a small company," he says.

Or, as Gary McIntosh, of Lindsay's CATV cable system puts it: "On the one hand, we're trying to do a service for the community and on the other hand, we can't. Quite a few cable companies are treading very lightly."

The Lindsay company is one of them, he says. He's been considering broadcasting Lindsay council meetings — "We even looked into purchasing libel insurance," — but you can't be insured against libel unless you can control what is said, and the cable operators can't.

The gap in the law has become obvious only in the last two or three years as cable companies have become more involved in community programming.

But because most community programming is produced by amateurs — usually volunteers — the companies are sitting ducks for libel actions "with every bit of programming we carry," McIntosh says.

One successful lawsuit could bankrupt many small companies.

Legislation to give cable companies the same rights as print and broadcast reporters is scheduled to be introduced during this session of the Ontario legislature, says a spokesman for Attorney-General Roy McMurtry.

That would give cable companies the opportunity to air a retraction and limit damages to the amount the plaintiff could prove he's lost because of the libel.

But the spokesman said this would not provide blanket protection against broadcasting libellous statements made during a meeting of council.

In the Campbellford case, the council meetings are so popular, some rural residents regularly drive into town to see them on friends' televisions.

Local people are fascinated, Redden says, because it's the first time most of them have ever seen their municipal government at work.

"But we don't want to go into this thing blind," he says.

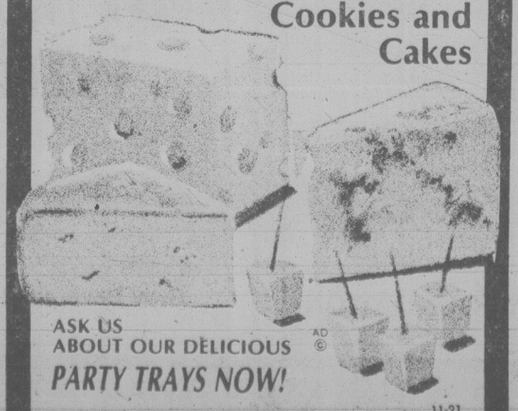

Ironically, his company was invited to begin the taping sessions by the council, which had to pass a special bylaw allowing his cameras into the chamber.

So far, there have been only two successful suits against cable companies in Canada. One Saskatoon company was found guilty of contempt of court earlier this year when one of its volunteer hosts read on-air a viewer's strong criticism of the court system.

But in Peterborough, there's one cable company that has no fears.

"I'm not sure if we're protected under the law," he says, "but all we do is turn it on and let it roll. What you see is what you get. How could we be sued?"

Love wins: 80-year-old to wed

By RALPH WILSON

EDMONTON (UPC) — Eighty-year-old David Peal proposed to his sweetheart of 15 years, 65-year-old Norah McGill, moments after he heard a court injunction against the marriage had been repealed.

Peal, a former brigadier in the Indian Army, had been barred from marrying Miss McGill by a 1977 court order issued at the request of Miss McGill's two sisters.

An Edmonton Court of Queen's Bench justice this week repealed the 1977 injuction that said the marriage was not in Miss McGill's best interests because she has been suffering from multiple sclerosis since 1939 and her mental capacities had deteriorated.

Peal, who decided to stay in Canada rather than move back to England and give up hope of marrying Miss McGill, said Tuesday he was delighted by the new development.

"We'll be celebrating all right," Peal said Tuesday, "I just haven't picked the place."

Peal met Miss McGill in church and said "she fell for me right away, but it took me a little longer to decide it was love."

Miss McGill's sisters, who were appointed trustees and obtained the restraining order preventing the marriage, were opposed to the relationship and argued their sister was incapable of managing her own affairs.

However, Mr. Justice A.M. Dechene decided to accept the opinion of the couple's doctor, who told the court the marriage was important for Miss McGill's psychological welfare.

The couple's lawyer, Lou Friedman, said he's been working on the case for two years, trying to clear a legal lane for marriage.

"Norah's mother died in 1972 and a trust fund was set up for her. She was being cared for at a nursing home but she was most unhappy about that and kept asking David to take her out," he said.

In 1974, Peal convinced the nursing home authorities he could care for Miss McGill, and the two have been sharing accomodation at his downtown apartment ever since.

"It's a one-bedroom apartment. She's in the bedroom and I sleep in the drawing room in a pull-out bed," Peal said.

Peal said he and his fiance hope to exchange vows in the same church where they met 15 years ago.

Police siege misfires

TORONTO (UPC) — Heavily armed Toronto police, responding to reports of a possible shooting and hostage-taking, laid siege for an hour and a half to a north-end apartment building.

A police spokesman said a woman called police saying she was armed and was holding a hostage. Officers of the emergency task force sealed off the building and finally talked the woman into surrendering, 1½ hours later.

"Apparently, the hostage was her common-law boyfriend," the spokesman said. "After a while, he said 'enough of this,' and went over the balcony."

The woman, who was reported to be intoxicated, was arrested without a struggle and charged with possession of a weapon dangerous to the public peace — a pellet rifle.

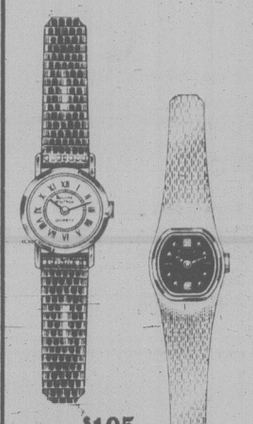

Fight to save lovers' wall

LLANDINAN, Wales (Reuter) — Welsh romantics are trying to save the villagers century-old lovers' wall, a trysting place of courting couples since the days of Queen Victoria. Local vicar Trevor Blackshane is leading a campaign against British government plans to replace the stone wall with a metal crash barrier under a road-wideningproject. "People have leaned and sat on the wall since it was built," the vicar said.

Science expert despairs

VANCOUVER (CP) — Within the next 15 years Canada may lose the scientific capability it has built up over the last 25 years, the chairman of the Science Council of Canada said Tuesday.

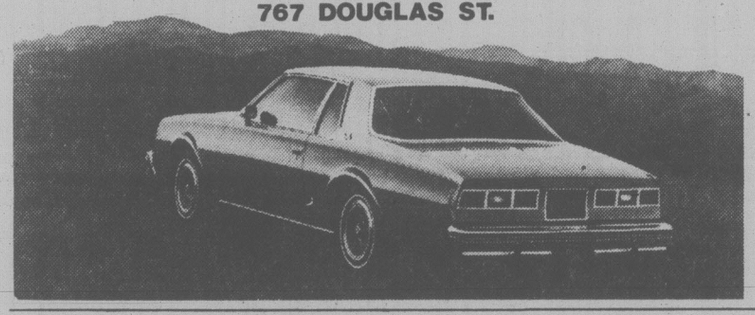

Claude Fortier said that unless bright young scientists are encouraged, they won't be able to teach university graduate students when the next major wave arrives in the 1990s.

"We will be faced with a situation even worse than in the 1950s when we imported a large number of university professors from the U.S. and Europe."

He said with declining university enrolments today, governments and universities are cutting back on scientific research.

The council plans to study science programs at Canadian schools and universities next spring and recommend ways of increasing the scientific literacy of the general public.

Fortier said many students now desert science courses for easier subjects, because of bad science teaching, inappropriate text books and a lack of Canadian content in science teaching.

The first prize in each category will be FIFTY DOLLARS. The first runner-up in each category will win $25 to put towards Christmas shopping and the second runner-up will win $15.
In addition, each winning drawing will appear in the edition published before Christmas day. One will be selected and will appear in color in the paper. The others will be published in black and white.

Eaton's tells how to buy a good night's sleep.

In order to buy a good night's sleep, you should know exactly what your own special needs are, as well as something about the basics of mattress and box spring construction. And those are things that can't be determined by just walking through a bedding department. Since we can't personally escort you on your buying trip, we'll do the next best thing. Here's the information you need to know on how to buy a good night's sleep.

Getting your Beautyrest

If your present mattress needs replacing, be prepared to skimp somewhere else in your household budget, not here. (Remember all those hours you'll be sharing with your new Simmon's Beautyrest.) During an average night you shift positions appromixately 40 times, and without your being aware of it, you give your mattress a tremendous beating over the years. The Simmon's Beautyrest can take the stuffing being knocked out of it, that's why it comes with a 20-year limited warranty.

In bedding, as in everything else, you get what you pay for. Compare the investment in a Beautyrest which will last 20 years and is used 7-8 hours per day, to the cost of an automobile which is kept 5-7 years and is only used 1-2 hours per day on the average.

If you're looking for an investment that will last, Beautyrest mattress definitely has time on its side with its 20-year limited warranty.

Size makes all the difference

The rule of thumb on mattress length is: the bed should be at least six inches longer than the body that sleeps on it. For width: you and your partner should be able to lie on your backs with elbows extended and hands under your head. Many couples find a 54-inch double bed too narrow, and no wonder, each spend the night on a cramped 27-inch width of space. That is the size of a junior size crib.

A queen size bed, on the other hand, is 60x80 inches long. This will give you each three more inches in width. That may not sound like a lot, but you'd be surprised what those few extra inches can do to protect you from flailing arms. A king size bed (70x80 inches) is pure luxury; it gives two people each the space of a 39 inch twin bed.

Choosing your bed of roses

How firm or how soft your mattress should be is a personal matter. What is a bed of roses to one sleeper may be a backbreaking billiard table to another. It is a medical fact, however, that a firmer mattress supports your back better than a mattress that's too soft. If your mattress is an old softy, your body isn't supported properly and it sags out of alignment. That's really asking for fatigue or even back pain. But it is also a medical fact that a mattress with a surface that's too hard isn't too good for you either. It can interfere with your circulation as you sleep, causing you to wake up with numb toes and arms. The perfect solution is a Simmon's Beautyrest which is available in 7 degrees of firmness to support everyone's need.

Supporting Beautyrest

How do you tell if a mattress is the right support? You test it. You wouldn't buy a pair of shoes without trying them on. The same is true of a Beautyrest mattress. Try it out. Take your shoes off, climb on the bed, and stretch out.

The Beautyrest conforms to the contours of the body. This proper contour support means your spine is supported in the straightest line possible, in any position you choose to sleep. Proper contour support is absolutely necessary for the healthiest and most restful sleep.

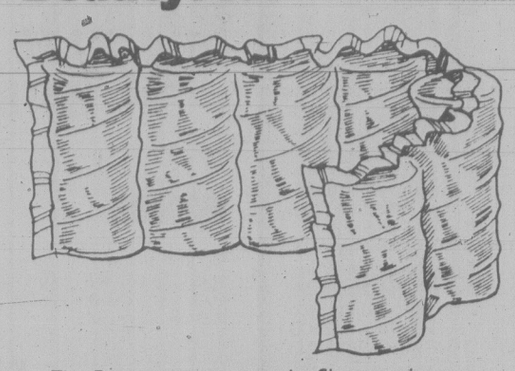

Now turn over. The mattress should support your areas of greatest weight, such as shoulders and hips. Yet those areas in contact with the mattress should feel comforted by padding.

How compatible you and your mattress are makes the difference between waking up relaxed and rested, or feeling every morning is a "morning after."

One thing to remember: don't go mattress shopping when you're really tired. In that condition, anything will feel good.

In addition to comfort, other points to consider as you mattress shop are construction, padding, ticking and detailing. These indicate quality, and quality is the key to how well a mattress is going to perform. Here's the inside story on the Beautyrest mattress by Simmons.

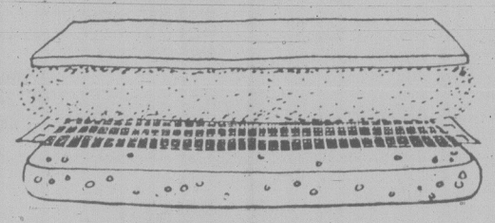

Inside story on the Beautyrest

The Beautyrest mattress by Simmons is an innerspring mattress. A double size mattress, for example, has 837 pocketed coils. But don't get unduly excited about the number of coils in the unit. What really counts is in the design of the springs, and their mechanics.

Simmon's barrel shaped, individually pocketed coils are what make the Beautyrest a unique support system. Each coil operates independently of the others like the keys of a piano. This independent spring action means your hefty husband can hold down his own half of the mattress without making you roll in the centre.

Check up on cushioning

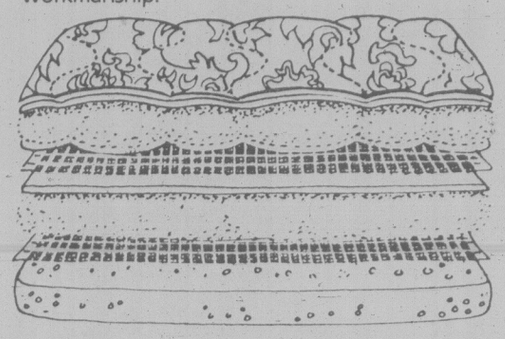

Upholstering is another essential ingredient in the construction of Simmon's Beautyrest. No matter how perfect a spring construction may be, it needs cushioning over the surface to sleep comfortably. Only Simmon's Beautyrest mattresses have foam quilting which is backed with a half-inch layer of felt and nylon blendnet for added comfort and strength.

In a Beautyrest mattress, the upholstery material is well secured to the innerspring to prevent shifting and bunching. Be sure to check out this point with an Eaton's salesperson.

The beauty of a Beautyrest

Beauty is only skin deep; this goes for mattresses, too. There are some things to look for in ticking that can tell you about the overall quality of the mattress. For instance, heavy ticking wears better than lightweight fabric. Closely woven material tends to hold its shape longer. Take a look at the stitching. If it's smooth and even, but more than that, if it is double locked stitched like Beautyrest it's a sure sign of quality workmanship.

Details shouldn't be overlooked

Details are the tip-off to quality.

Check the edge of a mattress. If it doesn't have a pre-built border like Beautyrest, sagging is likely to occur where people sit on the edge of the bed.

All mattresses should have handles for turning. Take a look at the way they are attached. A handle anchored to a metal piece inside the mattress such as the Beautyrest design represents better quality than one held by an eyelet or washer to the border.

Buy matching box springs

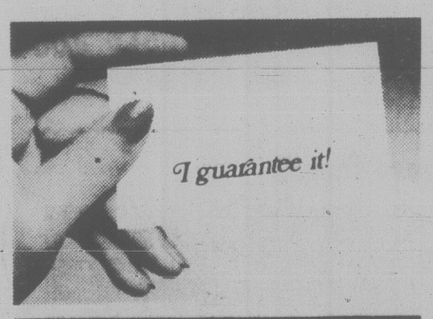

Box springs can be purchased separately from mattresses — but it's not a good idea, because a worn box spring will not adequately support a new mattress.

With the Beautyrest set, the box spring and mattress are designed to work together. And the box spring provides about 40 percent of the support your body gets at night. As a result, the Beautyrest box spring will prolong mattress life.

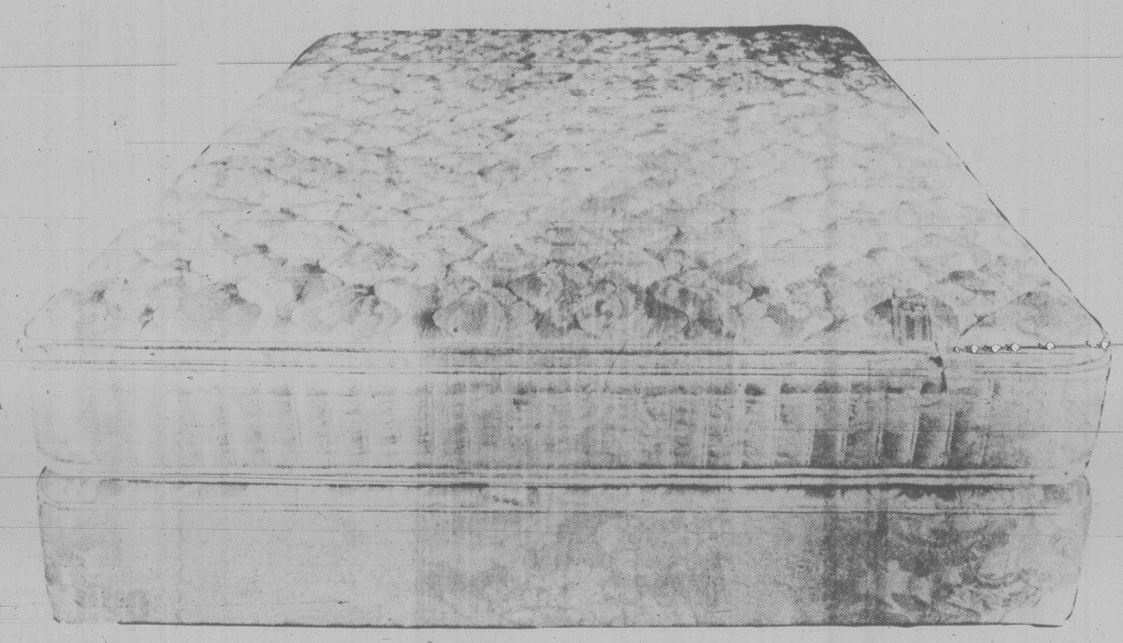

Tips on caring for your Beautyrest

Use a mattress pad to protect your Beautyrest from perspiration, soil and stains. A pad can always be machine washed. A mattress cannot. Don't sit on the edge of the bed, as weight concentrated in one area weakens the supporting edge of the base and mattress.

To prolong the life of your Beautyrest, turn it every 4 to 6 weeks foot to head and side to side. This will help the upholstery fillings to settle down evenly.

We back it up in writing!

For a good night's sleep, you need your Beautyrest by Simmons

National watch on injuries eyed

OTTAWA (CP) — There may soon be a national injury surveillance system which will ease one of the headaches associated with consumer protection, Consumer and Corporate Affairs Minister Allan Lawrence said Tuesday.

He told the Commons' social affairs committee that when he was appointed minister in June he was horrified at the lack of a national medical surveillance system and has since discussed creation of one with provincial counterparts.

Lawrence said a computerized system, such as those used in the United States and Scandinavia, would allow the department to determine how widespread are injuries and health hazards associated with some products.

He could not say when it would be established but indicated during an interview that one would be forthcoming soon.

The network would link together hospitals, clinics, provincial health departments and workmen's compensation boards once jurisdictional problems have been hammered out.

"That's the maddening thing about it," Lawrence said. "I suspect that deeply buried in provincial bureaucracies is exactly that type of information at the moment.

"I think it's being collected at the moment . . . for (provincial health insurance plan) purposes or labor departments and their workmen's compensation boards. What must really be done is to collect it together . . . for federal purposes."

Such a system would have been invaluable during last summer's flap over exploding 1.5-litre soft drink bottles, Lawrence said.

The department received about 50 complaints of injuries because of the narrow-necked, torpedo-shaped bottles but there were probably many more injuries which were never reported because consumers merely accepted them as general household accidents.

The Consumers' Association of Canada said at the time that the U.S. National Electronic Injury Surveillance System had been able to ascertain that more than 32,000 persons were injured there by the bottles in 1974 alone.

The association has long advocated the establishment of a comparable system here.

"We keep a pretty close eye on those American statistics because their economy and their life-style down there is so much like our own," Lawrence said.

The bidding:

At first, believe it or not, there were some members of the club who claimed they could fathom the workings of Sylvia's mind. But it did not take them overly long to disabuse themselves of this ridiculous notion.

They discovered soon enough that Sylvia's extraordinary ideas of how one should apply the general principles of the game resulted in an approach far different from that of any player they had ever seen before.

Take this deal that arose when Sylvia participated in her first duplicate tournament at the club. Perhaps she should not have been allowed to play, but most of the members felt that she would surely add zest to the game — and they certainly were not wrong in this expectation.

Thus, in the accompanying deal, Sylvia was West and found herself on lead against four spades, a contract that was reached at all 13 tables. All the other West players led either the jack of hearts (won in dummy with the queen) or a low diamond. In every one of those cases, declarer easily made the contract.

Sylvia, at this stage of her career, had already learned the "rule" about leading the highest card of a suit her partner had bid. But, since her partner had not bid any suit at all on this occasion, she decided to lead the highest card of her own suit. Accordingly, she led the king of hearts!

As a result of this fantastic lead, poor South could no longer make the contract. He won the king with the ace and played a trump, but he was fighting a losing cause. Sylvia took her ace of trumps and returned the jack of hearts. East ruffed dummy's queen, led back a club, and Sylvia proceeded to take her ace of clubs and ten of hearts to put the contract down one.

SOLUTIONS THURSDAY

YOUR HOROSCOPE

Astrological Forecast for Thursday, November 29, 1979
By SYDNEY OMARR

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Your pioneering instincts surge to forefront. Obstacles are pushed aside as you imprint your own style. Highlight initiative, new starts, added independence of thought and action. Aquarius, Leo, Scorpio natives figure in exciting scenario.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Message or call from one who has been "out of sight" aids in restoring sense of direction, worth. Accent on confidential data, illusions, ability to dramatize an apparent ordinary situation. Gemini, Virgo, Sagittarius persons figure prominently.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Family reunion could be on agenda. Profit indicated as result of recent business transaction. Accent on hopes, wishes, establishing meaningful relationship. Fine for remodeling, beautifying surroundings. Taurus, Libra, Scorpio persons play key roles.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): What seemed to be a loss "reverses gear." You gain added prestige and could receive civic honor. See places, people as they exist, not merely as you wish they might be. Pisces person aids in clearing lines of communication. Know it and be receptive.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Publish, advertise, promote your own interests. Perceive potential. Long-range view is essential to progress. See picture as a whole, not in bits and pieces. You get job done. You get established as one who can finish in strong, determined fashion.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Dig beneath surface indications—if persistent, you strike pay dirt. Financial, employment prospects of partner or mate figure prominently. Relationship is intensified. You'll have more responsibility, but also greater chance for ample reward.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Maintain low profile. Be discreet, examine legal ramifications. Spotlight on joint efforts, cooperation with one who seems to be indifferent. In actuality, you make headway and establish rapport in new areas. Leo native plays major role.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You learn by teaching. Your natural ability as psychologist surges to forefront. You perceive what others are thinking and what they are apt to do. Dependents and pets dominate scenario. You might be treated to a gourmet dinner!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Restrictions, obstacles fall aside. You are capable now of enlarging horizons, perceiving potential. Open lines of communication. Member of opposite sex does care and you will know it. In matters of speculation, stick with number 3.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Sense of security is restored. What had been misplaced, lost or stolen is recovered. Maintain steady pace. Money comes from surprise source. Be aware of details, fine print, subtle nuances. Read between the lines, utilize lesson learned in recent past.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Emphasis on change, travel, self-expression. Special communique contains favorable news. Green light is flashed in connection with advertising or publishing project. Avoid scattering your efforts. A "restless relative" helps inspire you.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Lunar position emphasizes increased income, knowledge of your own capabilities. Major domestic adjustment dominates scenario. Taurus, Libra, Scorpio individuals figure prominently. Your desire to "collect" is brought to forefront.

IF NOVEMBER 29 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are intuitive, a natural teacher and psychologist. You are spiritual rather than religious in orthodox sense. You see beyond the immediate and you can inspire others to perceive their own potential. You make money with Capricorn, sign contracts with Gemini and are physically drawn to Aries. Cancer, Aquarius, Leo individuals seem to be present at important events in your life.

FUN WITH FIGURES

By J.A.H. Hunter

We have 4788 for the game today. Two 8's, one 7 and one 4. Using all four each time, but no other digits at all, you form expressions for the conservative numbers from one up.

Any arithmetical signs may be used, but no summation or factorial symbols. Don't forget decimals, regular and repeater, also roots and powers. For example, 88 + 7 — 4 is a solution for 91.

The limit without a break in continuity seems to be 100. I shall be glad to check solutions, and will send hints to help in future games if requested.

Yesterday's answer: DART was 9561 (odd).

An operatic holiday for Col. Klink

NEW YORK (AP) — You would hardly recognize Werner Klemperer.

"It's the beard," he says, fingering the precisely shaven thatch around his chin.

Maybe it's the uniform — the one he has not worn since he stopped portraying Col. Klink, the bumbling POW camp commander on television's Hogan's Heroes.

Both changes befit Klemperer in his role this season as the benevolent Pasha Selim in the Metropolitan Opera production of Mozart's Die Entfuehrung aus dem Serail, or The Abduction from the Seraglio.

"The four weeks I've spent at the Met are the most exhilirating of my career," Klemperer says. "It sure beats sitting on a sound stage."

For the music-loving Klemperer — his father was the conductor Otto Klemperer — the non-singing role at the Met is something of a holiday. He spends much of his free time attending rehearsals of various Met productions.

Although he now refuses all offers to do roles like Klink, Klemperer is pleased to find the bumbling colonel following him, as a sort of kind ghost. The role, he says, gave him the national recognition which has allowed him to do other things.

He does not regard his Met performance as a highbrow antidote to seven years of Hogan's Heroes.

"I think highbrow is a very misused word," he says. "I don't think a good, funny sitcom is of any less value than something at the Met."

Klemperer takes a serious interest in opera and — as a teacher of master classes in acting for opera singers at Aspen, Colo. — hopes to influence its performance. He wants to stamp out the face-forward-and-sing-out style of staging.

"People are paying 40 and 50 dollars for a seat, and they are getting tired of having people stand like sticks. They want better-motivated theatrical excitement, instead of unmotivated, dusty tradition."

'For $10,000 U.S., why not?'

VANCOUVER (CP) — For Dorothy Stratten it was a $10,000 opportunity. For Ken Honey it was attractive relief from thousands of meat-and-potatoes photo assignments. And for millions of Playboy magazine readers, it was another fold-out fantasy in living color.

Miss Stratten, a 19-year-old from Coquitlam, adorned the centrefold of Playboy's August issue as playmate of the month.

"I'm really proud," she said in an interview.

"For one girl to represent one month out of the United States and Canada! The competition is incredible. You've got to be in pretty good shape. But most of all, it's personality and brains."

Stratten's trip to international exposure started last summer when she was discovered by photographer Honey in Vancouver and flown to Los Angeles. Thousands of pictures later, she was chosen first runner-up in the 25th anniversary playmate contest and scheduled for a future centrefold.

"It only took me five or six weeks," she said. "I was really quick. I just got my hair cut."

It is not always so easy.

"Some girls, it takes them two years. They have to gain a lot or lose weight or let a scar heal."

From the thousands of pictures taken, 12 were chosen to accompany the gatefold, the only shot to be retouched or airbrushed.

Stratten had no choice in the final selection.

"The only choice we have is if you don't like a position or clothes. They don't want to make you uncomfortable."

Honey, a Vancouver photographer, has an astonishing record — he has launched six B.C. women into the centre pages of the world's best-known girlie magazine. Another 20 have adorned the inside pages.

"Nudity is as sexy as an apple," says the 51-year-old photographer. "It only means something to people with a hangup.

"If a girl can get $10,000 U.S. for being nude in Playboy, why not?"

The Winnipeg-born Honey says that for every woman he photographs nude, "I take 1,000 pictures of lumber — only a small percentage of my time is spent shooting women."

All but two of the 12 pictures in Playboy — the smallest and the least clear — show her naked or half-dressed, but Stratten said she doesn't think of herself as an inspiration of lust for millions.

"I see the pictures as nudes, like nude paintings," she said. "They are not made for people to fantasize about. They are beautiful."

And she doesn't understand why feminist groups object to Playboy or tell her she is being exploited.

"The magazine in itself is more and more read by women for the interviews and stories. And I look at the pictures to improve myself . . . the way they have their makeup on."

Stratten, who is paid $200 a day to represent the magazine on tour, said no one has coached her on how to handle interviews, despite the constant presence of a travelling publicity manager.

Like many Playmates, Stratten, a secretary, wants to be an actress. That and the money were her reasons for being photographed nude, and after a year of acting lessons in Los Angeles, she has landed the lead role in a Canadian movie, Autumn Born. Filming will start in Winnipeg next month.

She said it is a serious drama, not pornography.

"It's the story of a 17-year-old whose parents died. She's a spoiled brat but very rich.

"The heroine is supposed to take over the family company when she turns 18, but her uncle has other plans. He wants control, and so he kidnaps her and locks her away until she agrees."

Stratten said much of the movie consists of the girl getting beaten up.

Some parents would be horrified if their daughter decided to appear naked in a magazine featuring entertainment for men, but not Stratten's.

"My mother was very surprised. I had always been very conservative. I wouldn't even walk around the house in a nightgown.

"But she was proud that I could make such a decision and know it was right. Now she's ecstatic."

Honey, who started his affiliation with the magazine with his first Canadian Playmate in the March, 1962, issue says not all attractive girls are as willing to shed their clothes for a chance of fame and fortune. There are obstacles.

"I placate the inevitable boyfriend, pacify the parents and cope with jealous friends."

His recent find has reinforced his view of Vancouver, of which Coquitlam is a bedroom suburb.

"Vancouver has more attractive girls per capita than any other city in the country," Honey says. "B.C. is the California of Canada . . . the beautiful people seem to gravitate here.

"Most women, if they have a nice figure and face, want to be photographed. And if there's financial incentive, they're even more anxious to do it."

If Miss Stratten doesn't make it in the movies, she may still cash in on Playboy.

A Playboy centrespread offers a one-in-12 chance to become a Playmate of the year and in 1978 that meant an additional $155,000 in cash and prizes for the winner.

Canadian teaches Indian dancing

WINNIPEG (CP) — Fifteen years ago Anne-Marie Gaston left Canada to work as a teacher in India.

Today, under the name of Anjali, she performs and teaches classical Indian dance in Canada.

The transformation was not what she had in mind when she first decided to learn the art.

"I wasn't setting out to become a performer," said Anjali during a Winnipeg visit.

"I started taking it just to dance. I liked the rhythm — it appeals to the dramatic sense."

Anjali, who now makes her home in Ottawa, lived and studied in India from 1964 to 1966, then returned to Canada to work towards her bachelor's degree in physical education.

While practising her dance routines in the gym of University of Toronto one day, an Indian musician who was putting together a show happened to see her.

"He asked, 'Do you want to be in a program?' and I said, 'sure,' " Anjali recalled.

In 1968, she returned to India to further her studies with a dance master.

Her studies were "hard, very hard." Each student is directly associated with a dance master, and a bad performance "would reflect badly on the master."

Tired of eating dinner off the old, humdrum china? Ted Veenendaal has a solid gold place setting for two that sells for $252,000. Or if you entertain a lot, you might consider the setting for 36. It sells for $5.78 million. "Obviously, this is not for everybody," the Dutch merchant said while showing off $1-million worth of samples in his room at the Waldorf-Astoria in New York.

For an uneducated woman who has been called trash and linthead all her life because her family worked in a cotton mill, the applause for Crystal Lee Sutton at the federal NDP convention was sweet. Sutton is the real-life Norma Rae, the cotton mill worker who helped organize the first union — and still the only union — in a J.P. Stevens textile factory in North Carolina. She never met actress Sally Field, who portrayed her in the widely-acclaimed movie Norma Rae, nor did she receive a cent for the film. In Toronto on a speaking tour about the plight of textile workers, Sutton won two thundering ovations at the convention when she made a brief appearance.

The trouble with garage sales is that sometimes a person goes intending to sell and ends up buying. That's the problem Richard Carpenter, of the singing Carpenters, ran into at an auto auction in California. Carpenter brought 18 of his 92 classic autos to get rid of the "excess." But before a one of them sold, he bought a 1966 Mustang convertible for a record $9,200. He finally managed to sell four of his own cars.

Ray Stahl pumps his own water, grows his own vegetables and shoots his own meat. He also mines his own coal. In the fall and winter, the 58-year-old Port Washington, Ohio resident blasts, shovels and hauls as much as four tons a day from his mine 200 metres into a hill, then sells it for $25 a ton to area residents who use their own trucks to haul it away.

An artist refused an immediate appointment with the art editor of a weekly New York newspaper told the receptionist: "I'll leave a message" — and chopped of two of his fingers. Police said Henry Benvenuti, 27, severed his fingers with a small axe he pulled from a briefcase, then left the fingers and case behind. Police found him in a taxi not far away and took him to hospital.

Dear Abby:

I am a 64-year-old, fairly attractive widow. After losing my husband of 40 years, I sold my home and moved to a lovely retirement community. This place would be paradise — if it weren't for the women who live here with their husbands.

I have never seen such jealousy! They watch their men like hawks when I'm around. I used to be in business and have always felt comfortable around men, but since living here I'm afraid to be myself. I watch every word I utter, being careful not to come on too strong with the men, or be too charming or entertaining for fear some woman will think I'm trying to steal her husband. I once had a winning personality, but now I feel like a stupid, frustrated bump on a log.

When my husband was alive, I always encouraged him to dance with single women. Now when the music starts I go hide in the powder room for fear some man will ask me to dance and his wife will think I gave him the come-on.

What's a widow to do?

Frustrated

Dear Frustrated:

Be yourself, and don't try to second-guess other women. You can't know what they're thinking. The chances are that they are just as generous as you were in bygone years, but your sudden single status has caused you to be slightly self-conscious, insecure and perhaps an touch paranoid.

Dear Abby:

I'm a 27-year-old woman who has never married. I've had lots of boyfriends, but I've never had a lasting relationship with anyone.

About four months ago I met a terrific guy. He's 36, recently divorced, and just what I've always wanted. He told me on our very first date that he is not marriage material, wants no commitments and doesn't want to get serious. He said if I wanted to see him on those terms, we could have a lot of fun together.

I'm pretty sure I'm not the only girl he's dating, but our Saturday night dates last until Monday morning.

My problem is I've fallen in love with him. I've tried to date other guys, but my mind is always on him. I can't kid myself, Abby. I want marriage.

My head tells me this guy is not marriage-minded, but my heart won't let me quit seeing him. What should I do?

Hurting

Dear Hurting:

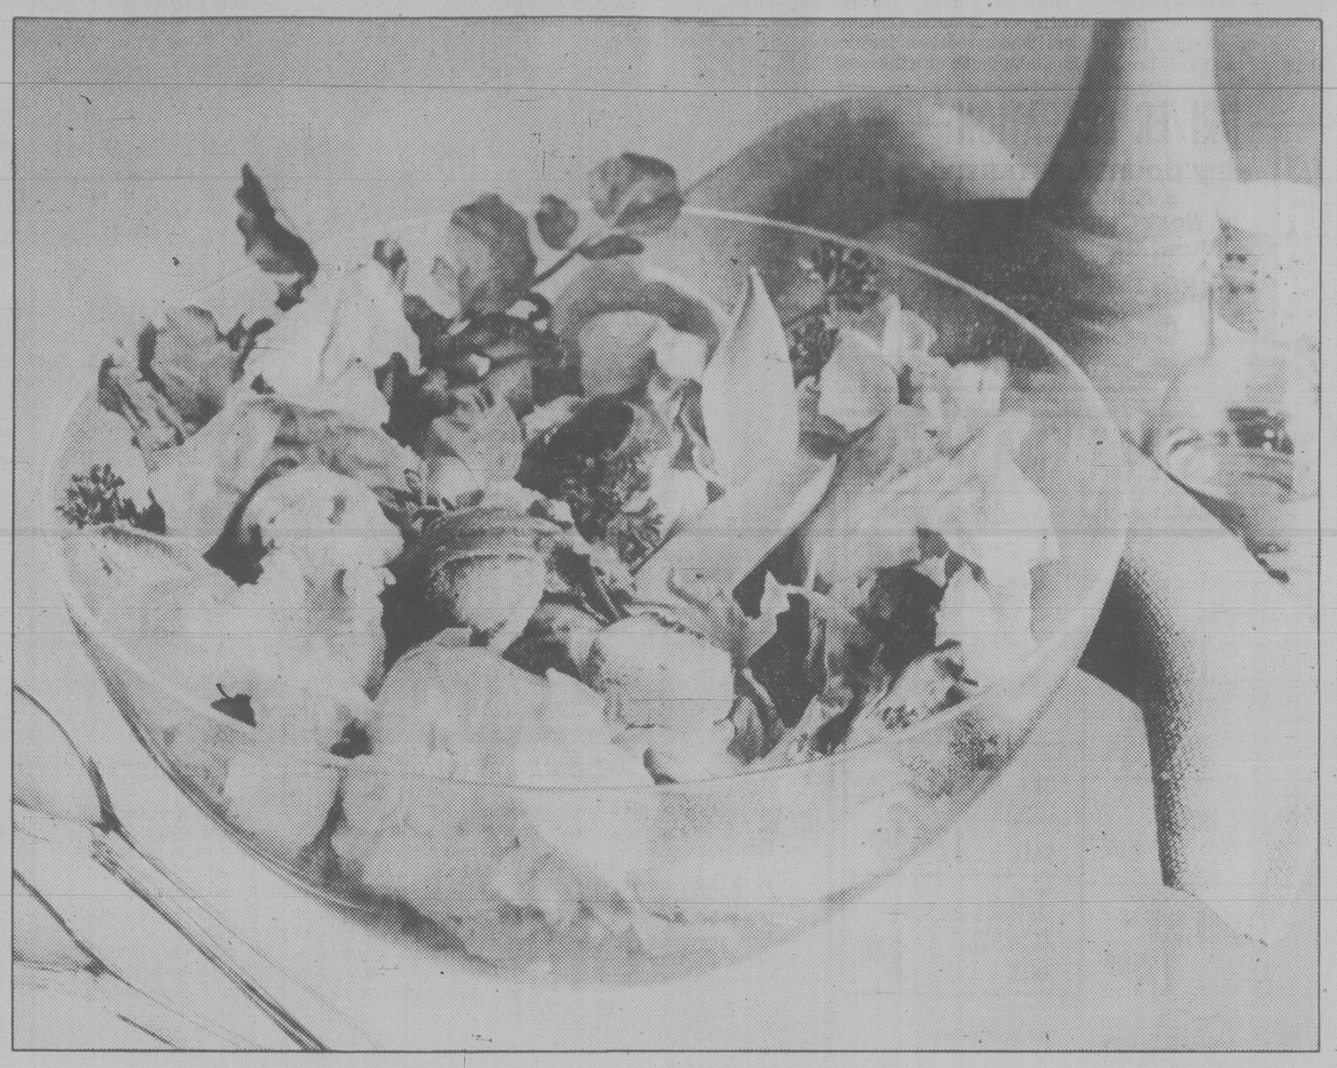

If you want marriage, you're wasting a lot of time, energy and love on a man who told you up front that he's not marriage material. The word from here here is, say goodbye and tell him why. And if you never hear from him again you'll be lucky.

You obviously have the ability to attract the kind of man you want to love — chances are good you'll be able to find one just as attractive and who wants to share the kind of settup you want.

One salad; easy on the niceties

By MIKE McGRADY

We tend to make too much of our cooking. Often we exaggerate the importance of the small detail, the non-entirely-essential nicety. Tonight's meal is a case in point.

Anchovies make a Caesar salad great — but watch for kids who've never given them a try before

Most recipes for Caesar salad seem designed to scare off the amateurs. One cookbook insists that the salad be served on "properly chilled" plates. Another tells us to be particularly careful when tossing the salad lest we "bruise" the lettuce. Well, I have strong doubts about this sort of thing. I'm not sure what the proper chill factor for a plate is. Moreover, I've given Caesar salads some fairly violent tossings, possibly causing both bruises and internal-injuries, but I've yet to hear a complaint.

Fettucini Alfredo is the famous dish that once caused Douglas Fairbanks and Mary Pickford to extend a vacation in Rome. When Alfredo was invited to introduce the dish to the New World, he left nothing to chance. Alfredo arrived in the city of Cincinnati carrying his own special flour for the noodles. He brought along aged Parmesan cheese from Italy. He insisted on imported peppercorns. He personally tested the butter, the cream, the eggs. And finally, when all was just so, he rolled out the noodles, cooked them in fiercely boiling water, stirred in the sauce and passed his creation to the culinary experts who were on hand. They could only gasp out their admiration. At last, the perfect pasta! Alfredo, however, was making a face.

"It was the water," he muttered. "I should have brought the water from Rome." Now, that strikes me as carrying things too far.

The Staples: Make sure these are all on hand: wine vinegar, garlic, salt, pepper, one egg, one large lemon, Worchestershire sauce, Tabasco sauce, Dijon mustard, butter, coffee.

The Shopping List: One loaf of day-old Italian bread; two heads of romaine lettuce; one two-ounce can of anchovies; one-half cup of olive oil; one-half pound of grated Parmesan cheese; one pound of fettucini noodles; one-half pint fresh cream; after-dinner mints.

Prepare in Advance: The croutons for the salad. Your supermarket doubtless carries several brands of packaged croutions. Try not to think about this fact.

Start with a loaf of day-old Italian bread. Slice away the crusts and cut the bread into bite-sized cubes. Melt half a stick of butter in a large frying pan over medium heat and add two cloves of minced garlic. Saute the bread cubes in the garlic butter, stirring them until they are browned all over. Set aside until ready to use.

5:30 p.m.: Tonight's first course will be the Caesar salad and it should be completely prepared — but not assembled — before you turn your attention to the fettucine.

Take the romaine lettuce, rinse clean, pat dry with paper towels and keep refrigerated until ready to serve.

Make the salad dressing in a jar with a tight cap. Begin with two cloves of minced garlic. Purists will advise taking the garlic and mashing it into the sides of a salad bowl with the heel of a spoon; it's precisely this kind of extra effort we're going to be avoiding tonight.

Add the juice of a large lemon, a tablespoon of wine vinegar and the olive oil. Then a couple of dashes of Worcestershire sauce, a few drops of Tabasco, a teaspoon of mustard and an egg that has been cooked in boiling water for just one minute. The dressing is set aside until the last moment, then poured into the salad with the other ingredients.

Incidentally, you should know that the classic way of preparing a Caesar salad is to start with a bowl of lettuce and simply add one ingredient after another. This makes for a good show until you break the nearly raw egg over the salad, at which time several of your kids will lose their appetites.

6 P.M.: Start a pot of coffee going. For a change of pace this is going to be served on ice, after dinner, with mints.

6:10 P.M.: Start the water boiling in your largest pot. This will be for the noodles. Follow the cooking directions.

6:30 P.M.: As the water reaches comes to a boil, throw in the fettucini, and then serve the first course, the salad. Break the lettuce into bite-sized pieces and place in a salad bowl. Add the anchovies, cut into small pieces, and then the croutons. Pour the dressing over the salad and add half the Parmesan cheese. Toss it gently, so as to leave the lettuce unmaimed.

As the salad is being eaten, the fettucini is boiling. You may have to interrupt your first course to go out for the final steps. Drain the noodles and place them in a large bowl with a half-stick of butter and a half-cup of the heavy cream and the rest of the Parmesan cheese. Add a generous amount of freshly ground black pepper. Stir all this together.

While we're hailing Caesar salads and other fine Italian cuisine, here's an offering for you to try on your own sometime. It is a meatless lasagne made with zucchini. Vegetarian families will be especially grateful for this recipe.

ZUCCHINI LASAGNE

1 pound zucchini
1/2 cup bread crumbs
1 pint dry cottage cheese
1/2 teaspoon bsil, crushed
1/4 teaspoon oregano
2 tablespoons chopped parsley
Salt, pepper
3 or 4 tomatoes, sliced
1 cup shredded mozzarella cheese
2 tablespoons butter or margarine

Parboil zucchini, 5 to 10 minutes, depending on size, just until tender-crisp. Drain.

Slice lengthwise 1/2 -inch thick. Pat dry with paper towels. Arrange half of zucchini slices in bottom of a 12 by 7-inch baking dish. Sprinkle with 2 tablespoons bread crumbs. Combine cottage cheese, basil, oregano, parsley and salt and pepper to taste. Layer half of mixture on top of bread crumbs. Top with half of sliced tomatoes. Repeat layering. Sprinkle with cheese and mixture of melted butter and 1/4 cup bread crumbs. Bake at 350 degrees 35 minutes or until bubbling hot. Makes 6 servings. For meat eaters, here's the equal.

LASAGNA

1/2 lb. ground beef
1/2 lb. sausage meat
3 cups tomato sauce 1/2 lb. Ricotta 3/4 cup grated Parmesan 6 ounces Mozzarella 1/2 lb. lasagna noodles

Fry ground beef and sausage meat until lightly browned and crumbly. Drain off excess fat. Add meats to tomato sauce; simmer covered for 45 minutes. Meanwhile, cook lasagna noodles in boiling salted water for 10 to 15 minutes (noodles should be slightly undercooked). Drain noodles on paper towels. To assemble lasagna, spread 1/4 of the meat sauce in a 12 x 9 x 2-inch baking dish. Arrange 1/3 of lasagna noodles on top. Mix cottage cheese and 1/2 cup Parmesan cheese. Sprinkle 1/3 cottage cheese mixture on top of noodles; top with 1/4 of Mozzarella cheese. Repeat layers two more times finishing with meat sauce. Top meat sauce with remaining Mozzarella and Parmesan. Bake in a 350-degree F. oven for 30 to 40 minutes until lasagna is bubbly and cheese lightly browned. Allow to sit 5 to 10 minutes; cut into squares and serve. Serves four to six.

Jaw-joint disease causes other pain

By DR. L.L. COLEMAN

Disease of the jaw joint (tempero-mandibular joint) is now the focal point of study, diagnosis and treatment for various types of pain in and around the area of the ear and upper part of the jaw.

Many kinds of neuralgic pains that spread to the ear, face, neck, head and even to the shoulders, formerly defied diagnosis and delayed treatment by many months.

In recent years, the tempero-mandibular joint has been recognized as the culprit and new techniques have been developed for the early diagnosis of this distressing condition.

At one time it was thought that a bad bite of the teeth (malocclusion) was the only reason for changes within the jaw joint. Today, more and more attention is being paid to the possibility that rheumatoid arthritis and osteoarthritis may develop within the jaw joint and cause these distressing symptoms.

With this greater understanding, many severe cases of neuralgia, pain in the ears, and pain in the jaw that were previously undiagnosed are now being actively pursued.

Highly refined X-ray techniques of the tempero-mandibular joints can now distinguish between poor alignment of the teeth and arthritic changes within the jaw joint itself. These X-rays are not the routine ones that are taken by dentists in their periodic examinations.

Once the jaw joint is suspected as the reason for diffuse, radiating pain, the specialized X-ray methods can reveal bony and cartilaginous changes within the joint itself.

When there is gross evidence of the fact that a poor occlusion of the teeth is responsible, it is possible to realign the teeth to take pressure off the jaw joint.

When arthritis, in one of its many forms, is the basic problem, treatment is directed to the jaw joint in the same way that treatment is given for other joints of the body afflicted with arthritis. There are many drugs which can bring relief to the jaw joint. Aspirin, indo-methacin, and other related drugs can be effective. In many instances, cortisone and other steroid anti-inflammatory agents are prescribed to relieve the neuralgic pain and the spasm of the muscles of the face.

Doctors and dentists are now aware of the fact that the jaw joint, with its vast nerve distribution, can hold the explanation for previously unsuspected causes of facial pain.

Dr. Coleman welcomes letters from Times readers. While he cannot answer every letter individually, he will pick those with the broadest general value for publication. Write Dr. L.L. Coleman, c/o The Victoria Times, 2621 Douglas St., Victoria, V8W 2N4.

Yule baking best done early

A home baking project for early December might well involve young folks in an after school hour before supper, or equally provide interest for a lone homemaker who likes to have something different for the coming festive season. With a little planning ahead to be sure all ingredients are available, a batch of Tart Shells can be made and baked, then either frozen or set aside in a rigid container on the refrigerator shelf.

For December visitors, various fruit and nut fillings will be appropriate for the Shells in place of icings and sweet cream which add mainly much fat and carbohydrate calories.

Everything for Christmas can be baked by you and your home helpers

Two or three small jars of prepared fillings can be made up in another hour's work on another day, ready to use at a few minutes notice in the Tart Shells.

If desired, a batch of the Cookie Dough can be used entirely for closed Tarts or little Mince Pies with covers, instead of the rich flaky pastry usually associated with these seasonal foods. The filling for these little Fruit Pies can be simpler and much less expensive, such as a teaspoonful of chopped date with a little grated apple and a touch of grated root ginger as flavoring and a digestive.

First, a Cookie Dough easily put together on one day, wrapped and refrigerated for use within a few days to finish making Tarts.

All quantities may be doubled for those of you wanting to make a large batch; or half can be wrapped and refrigerated for three or four days.

Use your metric measures.

COOKIE DOUGH FOR TART SHELLS

125 ml soft margarine
75 ml brown sugar
1 small egg
50 ml orange juice, with pulp
500 ml wholewheat flour
200 ml unbleached flour
5 ml baking powder
2 ml salt

Cream margarine with sugar. Add egg and beat. Add orange juice and mix well.

Measure dry ingredients into sifter; sift into liquid mix. Blend well into a ball of dough. Cover, and chill in refrigerator while making fillings.

If fillings are already prepared (see recipes below and suggestions above) go ahead and roll out dough after chilling. Roll out one portion between waxed papers (or a heavy polythene bag opened out flat); either method makes rolling dough easy, with no sticking.

Mould dough with hands to take in loose flour; roll out to about one-eighth inch thickness.

Cut 12 circles with 2½-inch cutter. Place close together on lightly greased cookie sheet (or in tiny muffin pans). Put a small amount of filling in centre of each.

For cookies, cut 12 more 2½-inch circles as covers. Press edges gently together to seal.

For Tarts in muffin pans, cut 12 circles 2-inch diameter and drop into place over the filling.

Bake in fairly hot oven 200 deg. C for 10 minutes until lightly browned.

DATE FILLING

125 ml chopped dates
50 ml water
a few gratings of root ginger
15 ml soft margarine

Cook dates, ginger and water in pan until thickening. If no root ginger use 1 ml powdered ginger. When thickened, stir in margarine. Let cool before using.

PRUNE FILLING

125 ml drained cooked prunes (stoned)
50 ml finely ground unsalted peanuts
a little grated orange or lemon peel

Blend together well; store in glass jar with lid. Use within three days, for either the cookie filling or in the Tart Shells.

COFFEE CAKE FOR CHRISTMAS

¼ cup soft margarine
¼ cup brown sugar
2 small eggs
½ cup milk from skim powder
2 cups apples chopped small
1 cup unbleached flour
½ cup wholewheat flour
2 tsp baking powder
½ tsp salt.
pinch of ginger

Measure, mix and beat first 4 ingredients in order.

Choose a well flavored, crisp apple. Chop and add at once to liquid mixture to prevent loss of flavor and vitamins. Then add flour mixture from sifter.

Spoon into well greased 10 by 6 by 2-inch baking dish.

Topping:
1 Tbsp soft margarine
2 Tbsp brown sugar
1 tsp finely ground unsalted peanuts
2 Tbsp wholewheat flour

Mix until crumbly and sprinkle evenly over mixture in dish.

Bake 30 minutes in quick oven 200 deg. C until brown and cake tests done with clean knife. Prevent from scorching if necessary, with loose foil over top for last 10 minutes.

Serve warm; or leave 10 minutes before removing from dish to cool. Then freeze and reheat before serving when wanted.

Homemade cookies, some with fillings and toppings give enough variety for parties and for gifts to friends who do not make their own. Yet they too can be made a part of the new tradition for homemade, less rich fare for the winter festivities.

Pot cheese drier than cottage

questions & answers

Q. I was recently attracted to a recipe that calls for pot cheese. I presumed this meant ricotta, but a friend tells me otherwise. What is pot cheese?

A. It is a form of cottage cheese and both cottage and pot cheeses are generally available in supermarkets and grocery stores. Pot cheese is somewhat drier than cottage cheese. Both are made by the same process, which includes souring milk either naturally or with an agent such as rennet.

When stirred, the milk (which has become semi-solid) breaks into curds and whey. The curds are then drained in cheesecloth or another suitable material. Pot cheese is drained for a somewhat longer period of time to make the curds drier.

Ricotta cheese is made by a similar process, but it is not made with the curds. Instead it is made with the coagulable substances in whey.

Q. My husband is on a low-calorie diet and does not drink regular milk. I always buy him skimmed milk (sometimes sold as skim milk) or low-fat milk (sometimes sold as nonfat milk). Is there a difference?

A. there is indeed a difference. Skimmed milk is milk with less than one-tenth of one percent of fat.

Regular milk contains 3.4 per cent fat. Low-fat or "nonfat" milk covers a broad range of milks and you should look on the container to determine the exact fat content. If it says 99 per cent no fat, it indicates, of course, that the milk still contains one per cent fat. Sometimes milk powder has been added to give it more palatability and to make it taste more like regular milk.

Any milk containing from 1 to less than 3½ per cent fat can be labeled "low fat."

Q. Sometime ago, in a recipe for cauliflower, you recommended putting the vegetable in a saucepan with water to cover and then adding a little milk. Why?

A. According to the textbooks, a little milk added to the water of certain vegetables (and some smoked fish dishes such as finnan haddie) helps keep the food white as it simmers.

Q. Sometimes I will prepare a dish, a casserole for example, and find that I have an excess of liquid in the dish. Is there any way to get rid of part of this liquid without picking up the heavy pot and straining it off?

A. Yes. Select an ordinary kitchen sieve. Hold it by the handle and insert the working part of the sieve into your soupy casserole, pushing it down to let the liquid flow inside. Use a ladle or a cup to scoop out as much excess liquid as required.

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — Hanna Reitsch, the world's first woman helicopter pilot who died here recently at the age of 67, had a number of other firsts to her credit.

She was the first to fly a glider over the Alps; the first woman to fly a rocket-propelled plane; the first German woman to attain the rank of flight captain; the first woman awarded the Iron Cross and the first woman to win the German National Glider Championship.

Avodcado St. Jacques was created by Chef Dieter Paul of the Fairmont Hotel in Dallas

Elegance in home cooking

Do you find yourself heading for an elegant restaurant when the urge for a gourmet dining experience occupies your thoughts?

With these big, ripe California and Florida avocados now in Victoria area food markets you might think of trying your own gourmet affair at home.

Chances are that you just can't spend the time, energy and money that it takes to dine out as often as you'd like. However, glamorous meals need not be limited to restaurant fare. With help from a noted chef who has a culinary "green thumb" and a little imagination, you can develop gourmet delicacies in your own kitchen. Avocado St. Jacques, created by Chef Dieter Paul of the Fairmont Hotel in Dallas, is one such delight that can add restaurant elegance to your dinner menu at home. Delicate scallops in a white wine sauce are colorfully complemented by an avocado half shell. It's a unique entree that will impress the most discriminating diner. Serve this dish with saffron seasoned rice, steamed zucchini squash and chilled wine for a special meal ideal for company fare or a romantic candlelit dinner for two.

Easy-to-prepare avocados can add a touch of class to almost any of your favorite dishes with appetizing results. Use avocados that are soft to the touch and simply cut the avocado in half for a multitude of serving possibilities. An avocado half shell adapts beautifully to many entree fillings from Steak Tartare to Chicken a la King. Curried Chicken, Crab Louis or Beef Stroganoff, to name but a few, are also flavorful when spooned into an avocado half shell. If you have a leftover avocado half, coat the cut surfaces with lemon juice to preserve the green color, cover with plastic wrap and store in the refrigerator.

Create a gourmet experience at your dinner table with the elegant Avocado St. Jacques.

Food tales shared

Looking through my files recently, I came across one of my favorite food anecdotes. It is from a book by the late novelist Elliot Paul, who wrote The Last Time I Saw Paris, as well as many mysteries.

Paul was by no means a major writer. But I remember with wry amusement a circumstance he describes in one of his mysteries, the name of which eludes me. The setting is Paris, and the cast of characters includes a rich Texan, his daughter and the French police.

The daughter was last seen the previous evening at Fouquet's Restaurant, where she had gone for dinner with an escort. When the police arrived, they demanded of the father when she had been last seen.

"Last night," he replied, "about 8 o'clock. She waved goodbye and said she was going to a Chinese restaurant on the Champs-Elysees. Foo Kay I believe it was." The name of that restaurant, incidentally, is pronounced Foo-ket's by most Parisians.

Paul was said to have been reasonably knowledgeable about food and wrote an obscure book, in collaboration with Luis Quintanilla, called Intoxication Made Easy. It has much less to do with drunkenness than with the preparation of one single recipe. The authors take 145 pages to describe to the reader the intricacies of making authentic Spanish rice. For all that, the recipe isn't terribly interesting, but some of the tales in the book are.

The journalist in me was amused to reread the anecdote, no doubt apocryphal, about the reporter who cabled an article to London in which the phrase "So's your old man" was used. An editor, a Cockney, corrected the copy to read, "Your father is also." What connection that has with the making of Spanish rice I have no idea.

Paul also favors us with the contents of a menu he ascribes to Lucullus, the celebrated Roman gastronome who lived before Christ.

"One of the prime Roman boors, Lucullus, served dinners that would cost $7,000 a plate at the present rate of exchange, while the populace ate barley gruel. One of his menus included nightingales' (Luscinia megarhyncha) tongues (which, being constantly used, are too muscular to be palatable), peacocks' brains (which flake too small to be conveniently forked) and the livers of black-veiled mourning fish (whose restricted diet gives them a flavor inferior to the wayfaring North American smelt)."

FISH & SEAFOOD month in Canada will be over with the end of November — but a winning combination for beauty, flavor and nutrition is that precious salmon steamed, along with spuds and some broccoli. These steaks stand a chance of overcooking any other way, and with this delicious dinner for two there are hardly any pots and pans to wash up.

Sprouting for food a growing pastime

By
MINNIE BERNARDINO
The Los Angeles Times

The availability of various sprouting implements and kits — ranging from the modestly priced pails or glass jars to the more sophisticated ceramic sprouters — have fostered the idea of sprouting.

Sprouts that can be eaten when they form green leaves are grown from the seeds of alfalfa, chia, garden cress, mustard and radish. Those that you eat before the leaves open or turn green are the larger sprouts of mung bean, soya beans, adzuki or red mung bean, fenugreek, wheat, rye and lentils.

Sprouts can be grown in almost any nonmetal or nonwood kitchen container. You can use plates, shallow casseroles or bowls covered with cheesecloth or paper towels. The important thing to remember is to rinse regularly and place the container in a warm, dark place.

How do yo use sprouts?

GRANNIE'S SLENDER SALAD FOR TWO

1 cup alfalfa sprouts
1 tart apple, sliced
2 green onions with tops, chopped
6 medium mushrooms, thinly sliced
1/2 green pepper, sliced in thin strips
1 stalk celery, sliced diagonally
Few slices red onion
Yogurt Dressing

Divide alfalfa sprouts in half and spread out on two salad plates. Arrange apple slices, green onions, mushrooms, green pepper, celery and red onion on top of sprouts., Serve with Yogurt Dressing. Makes 2 servings.

YOGURT DRESSING

1 cup plain yogurt
1 tablespoon white wine vinegar
1/8 teaspoon Dijon-style mustard
Salt-pepper

Combine yogurt, vinegar, mustard and salt and pepper to taste.

GARDEN CRESS AND CREAM CHEESE SANDWICH

1 (8-ounce) package cream cheese, softened
1 tablespoon grated onion
1/8 teaspoon white pepper
Pumpernickel or whole wheat-cinnamon-raisin bread
Tomato slices
1/2 cup garden cress, about
Pickle chips
Avocado slices dipped in lemon juice

Combine cream cheese with grated onion and pepper. Mix until creamy. Spread on bread slices. Top with tomato slices, garden cress and pickle chips. Serve as open-faced or closed sandwich. Garnish with avocado slices.

ADZUKISPROUT ALMOND COOKIES

1/4 cup shortening
1/2 cup sugar
1 egg, lightly beaten
2 tablespoons milk
1/2 teaspoon almond extract
1 cup flour
1 1/2 teaspoons baking powder
1/4 teaspoon salt
1 cup adzuki bean sprouts, toasted and finely ground in blender

Cream shortening and sugar in bowl. Beat in egg, milk and almond extract. Sift together flour, baking powder and salt. Add to egg mixture along with ground sprouts. Stir well.

Drop by rounded teaspoonfuls onto greased baking sheet. Flatten with bottom of a glass and press an almond into the center of each cookie. Bake at 350 degrees 15 to 20 minutes or until edges are golden. Makes about 2 dozen.

Note: To toast sporuts (also applicable to mung bean, soybean and whole wheat), dry sprouts between paper towels. Spread on baking sheet and toast in a 325-degree oven until completely dry and golden-brown, about 15 to 30 minutes depending on variety.

CLOVER BRAN MUFFINS

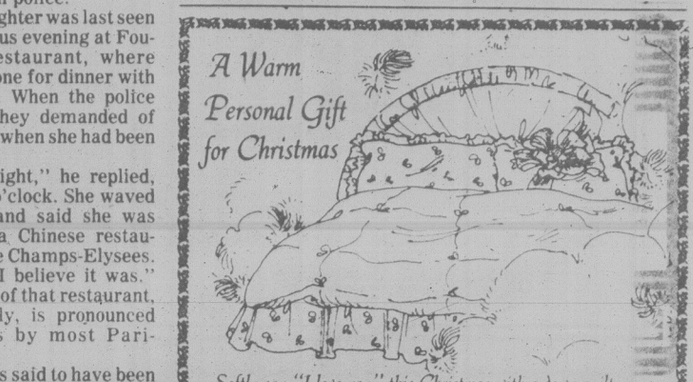

1 1/2 cups yogurt orsour cream
2 eggs, beaten
1/4 cup honey
1/4 cup butter or margarine, melted
1 1/2 cups all-bran cereal
1 cup whole-wheat flour
1 cup all-purpose flour
1 1/4 teaspoons soda
1/4 teaspoon salt
1 cup red clover sprouts

Lightly beat together yogurt, eggs, honey and melted butter. Stir in cereal, let soak about 5 minutes.

Combine flours, soda and salt. Add to bran mixture, mixing just enough to dampen flour. Stir in sprouts. Spoon into well-greased muffin tins, filling each cup 2-3 full. Bake at 350 degrees 20 to 30 minutes. Serve warm with butter and honey. Makes 20 to 24 muffins.

Tasty chicken liver dish a Provencale favorite

the 60-minute gourmet

If the dishes named provencale in French cuisine were eliminated from the cook's repertory, it would be an enormous loss indeed.

Provencale — or in the style of Provence — has many different meanings where ingredients are concerned. It may indicate the use of tomatoes and green peppers and capers and numerous herbs of Provence — thyme, fennel, rosemary and so on. The single indispensable flavor of provencale cooking is, however, garlic, either in slight or pronounced amounts.

One of my favorite dishes in that style is a simple saute of chicken livers and mushrooms made with more than a touch of garlic and no other seasoning added except a generous, last-minute sprinkling of parsley. Chicken livers, as I have noted many times, must be cooked quickly or they will toughen and become slightly unpalatable. Because of the speed involved, you would be well advised to study the recipe carefully. Note that the dish, start to finish, is cooked over high heat and that each batch of ingredients is drained well after cooking. At the end they are returned to the skillet for a final cooking with a small amount of butter.

A fine accompaniment for chicken livers provencale is eggplant, which is about as characteristic of that southern region of France as tomatoes and garlic. Curiously, eggplant, when cut into small cubes and sauteed, goes exceedingly well with rice.

To hasten the preparation, you would do well to begin with the rice and eggplant dish. Once this is put on to cook (the total cooking time is about 30 minutes) you will have time to concentrate on the main dish.

Foie de Volaille Provencale
(Chicken livers with garlic

1¼ pounds chicken livers.

Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste.

½ pound mushrooms.

8 tablespoons olive oil.

¾ cup flour.

2 tablespoons butter.

1 tablespoon finely minced garlic.

3 tablespoons finely chopped parsley.

1. Put the livers, one at a time, on a flat surface. Cut away and discard any tough connecting membranes. Cut the livers into quarters. Put the livers in a bowl and sprinkle with salt and pepper.

2. If the mushrooms are small, leave them whole. If they are large, cut them in half or quarter them.

3. Heat two tablespoons of oil in a heavy skillet and add the mushrooms. Add salt and pepper to taste. Cook the mushrooms over high heat, shaking and stirring, until they give up their liquid. Continue cooking, stirring, until they are golden brown all over.

4. Drain the mushrooms in a sieve and set aside. Discard the oil.

5. Add the flour to the livers and stir to coat them well.

6. Remove the livers to a baking sheet, separating them.

7. Return the skillet to the heat and add four tablespoons of oil. When it is quite hot, add half the livers, one at a time. Cook over high heat, turning the livers as they brown. One batch of livers takes about four or five minutes to cook. When the livers are cooked, transfer them with slotted spoon to the mushrooms in the sieve.

8. Add the remaining two tablespoons of oil to the skillet and cook the remaining livers, turning once. Drain the livers. Wipe out the skillet.

9. Heat the butter in the skillet. When it is quite hot, add the livers and mushrooms. Cook, shaking the skillet and stirring, until the mixture is piping hot.

10. Sprinkle the garlic over the liver mixture. Sprinkle with parsley. Serve immediately.

Yield: 4 to 6 servings.

Riz a l'Aebergine
(Rice with eggplant)

1 eggplant, 1 pound.

2 tablespoons butter.

½ cup finely chopped onion.

1 teaspoon finely minced garlic.

Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste.

½ cup crushed canned tomatoes.

1 bay leaf.

½ teaspoon dried thyme.

1⅛ teaspoon dried hot red pepper flankes.

1 cup chicken broth.

1. Trim off the ends of the eggplant. Peel the eggplant with a knife. Cut the eggplant into one-half-inch-thick slices. Stack the slices and cut them into half- inch strips. Cut the strips into half-inch cubes. There should be about three and a half cups. Set aside.

2. Heat the butter in saucepan and add onion and garlic. Cook, stirring, until onion is wilted. Add eggplant, salt and pepper. Stir. Add the tomatoes, bay leaf, thyme and pepper flakes.

3. Cook, stirring occasionally, about three minutes. Add the rice and broth. Add salt to taste.

4. Cover. Bring to the boil and let simmer 20 minutes.

Yield: 4 servings.

50 YEARS OF FINE WINES

Pork plentiful, popular — in the past and now

By MARIE BIANCO
Los Angeles Times

Because pork took so readily to salting, pickling and smoking, it was the favorite meat of early North Americans. The Spanish and English introduced hogs to the new world, and the hogs took care of themselves by feeding in the forests and undergrowth. With no refrigeration for fresh beef and lamb, the standard fare of the pioneers was salt pork.

Pork is still a favorite with North Americans today, and with good reason. First, pork is plentiful, and there are plenty of cuts to choose from. Second, from a nutritional standpoint pork is a good buy. Today's pork is leaner, with about 70 calories per ounce of cooked meat, higher in protein that ever before and an excellent source of the B vitamins. And third, it happens to be one of the best-tasting meats, lending itself to variety of treatments.

To make pork even more attractive, prices are expected to continue to drop throughout the fall and winter because of increased pork supplies. In the first half of 1979 pork prices averaged $1.50 a pound. In the second half the prices are expected to drop to an average $1.35 per pound or lower.

The Hog . . . early import

When storing fresh pork at home, keep it no longer than two days in the coldest part of the refrigerator. If prepackaged for self-service, it is not necessary to rewrap. To freeze, wrap closely and seal tightly with moisture-vapor-proof material and freeze quickly. Store at zero degrees for a maximum of one to three months for ground pork, three to six months for other fresh pork.

With cooler fall days calling for heftier meals, here are some suggestions using pork:

This one-dish meal is traditionally cooked and served in a large, black, cast-iron casserole, but any flame-proof casserole with a tight-fitting cover can be used.

PORTUGUESE PORK AND CLAMS

For marinade:
1 1/2 cups dry white wine
1 tablespoon paprika
1/2 teaspoon salt
Fresh-ground black pepper
3 cloves garlic, smashed
1 bay leaf
To finish dish:
2 pounds lean boneless pork, cut in 1-inch cubes
3 tablespoons vegetable oil
2 medium onions, sliced thin
1 large red pepper, seeded and cut in strips
2 cloves garlic, chopped fine
2 tomatoes, peeled, seeded and chopped
1/8 teaspoon crushed red pepper
1/2 teaspoon salt
2 dozen littleneck clams
1/4 cup fine-chopped fresh coriander
1 lemon, cut in wedges

1. To prepare marinade, combine wine, paprika, salt and pepper, garlic and bay leaf. Add the cubed pork and marinate for several hours, turning meat frequently to keep it moist.

2. Drain the pork and reserve marinade, discarding the garlic and bay leaf. In a large flame-proof casserole or skillet, heat 1 tablespoon vegetable oil. Add pork and cook until well-browned and tender. Remove to a bowl. Pour reserved marinade into pan and bring to a boil, scraping up all brown particles that remain in pan. Continue cooking until wine reduces to one cup; pour over prok.

3. In the same pan, heat remaining oil. Add sliced onion, red pepper and garlic and cook until vegetables are soft. Add tomatoes, hot pepper and salt. Simmer for 5 minutes and add clams. Cover pot and cook over high heat for 10 minutes, discarding, any clams that do not open.

4. Stir in reserved pork and any accumulated juices and simmer until thoroughly heated through. Sprinkle with coriander and garnish with lemon wedges. Makes 6 servings.

Pineapple is often found in sweet and sour pork ordered in Chinese restaurants. Actually, adding pineapple makes the dish Hawaiian or Polynesian, since pineapple does not grow in China.

CHINESE-STYLE SWEET AND SOUR

2 pounds lean boneless pork, cut in 1-inch cubes
2 eggs, lightly beaten
1/2 cup cornstarch
1/2 cup flour
1/2 cup chicken stock
1 teaspoon salt
4 cups peanut oil for deep frying

For sauce:
2 tablespoons peanut oil
2 cloves garlic, smashed
2 green peppers, seeded and cut into 1-inch cubes
2 medium carrots sliced thin
1 cup chicken stock
1/2 cup brown sugar
1/2 cup wine vinegar
2 tablespoons soy sauce
2 tablespoons cornstarch dissolved in 1/4 cup water

1. In a large bowl mix together egg, corn starch, flour, chicken stock and salt. Heat oil in wok or electric frypan to 375 degrees. Dip pork cubes in batter and fry in oil for 5 to 6 minutes. When done, drain and keep warm in a 250 degree oven.

2. To make sauce, in a clean wok or large skillet, heat 1 tablespoon oil. Add garlic, green pepper and carrot and stir fry for 2 minutes. Pour in chicken stock, brown sugar, vinegar and soy sauce. Bring to a boil.

3. Stir in cornstarch mixture and cook until sauce is thick and clear. Add fried pork pieces and serve at once with rice. Makes 6 servings.

Per serving: 699 calories; 50 gms protein; 39 gms carbohydrate; 37 gms fat; 23 gms unsaturated fat; 220 mgs cholesterol; 1,067 mgs sodium; 822 mgs potassium

Start thinking of turkey leftovers

—CP

LOBSTER LOVERS will be pleased to learn that British scientists have solved the problem of breeding lobsters in captivity. Early attempts failed when the crustaceans were put into large rearing tanks. They fought and tore each others legs off. Now the U.K. lab has devised a system of individual tanks in which each lobster is reared from two weeks old. They are moved to progressively larger tanks as they grow — until they are of marketable size about 30 months later. Here a scientist displays an 18-month-old specimen.

By ARLINE MARCOTTE
Christian Science Monitor

We're still a distance from Christmas yet, but perhaps you should start thinking now of what to do with turkey leftovers. A turkey dinner can add to your menus weeks later if you separate the light from the dark meat and freeze packages of food for specific dishes you will make later. Here are some easy directions for freezing with some recipes that you can serve long after the holiday.

Separate enough large dark meat slices for one meal onto freezer wrap and freeze. Into a freezer container, place leftover gravy and 2 cups of turkey slices. Then separate smaller pieces into one and one-half cup and 2 cup packages for later use.

Freeze any extra leftover gravy. Place turkey bones, breaking carcass bones with meat cleaver, on a large sheet of freezer paper for freezing. Following are recipes using the above frozen meat.

First use the leftover dressing with one package sliced meat and gravy thawed. Place turkey slices on bottom of rectangular casserole, putting one ice cream scoop of dressing on each slice of turkey. Cover with gravy. Bake at 350 degrees until bubbling.

BISCUIT-TOPPED TURKEY PIE

5 tablespoons turkey fat
One-half cup diced onion
4 tablespoons flour
2 cups turkey broth
1 teaspoon salt
One-fourth teaspoon pepper
2 cups diced turkey
1 cup each of cooked peas, diced carrot and diced celery

Melt fat and add onion, cooking 10 minuters over low heat. Add flour, stirring until blended. Slowly add broth, stirring continuously until thickened. Add salt and pepper.

Place turkey and vegetables in a three-quart casserole. Cover with hot sauce. Top with biscuits.

BISCUITS

2 cups flour
2 teaspoons baking powder
1 teaspoon salt
One-half cup shortening
1 egg
One-fourth cup milk

Sift together flour, baking powder and salt. Cut in shortening until mixture resembles coarse cornmeal. Beat egg, add to milk, and stir into mixture. On floured surface, knead one-half minute. Roll one-half-inch thick and cut with biscuit cutter. Place in casserole while still hot and bake at 400 degrees F. for 25 minutes.

ONION-TOPPED TURKEY CASSEROLE

One and one-half cups cubed turkey
1 drained can green beans (16 ounces)
1 can cream of chicken soup (ten and one-half ounces)
1 can French-fried onion rings (three and one-half ounces)

Combine turkey, green beans and soup in a two-quart casserole; cover. Bake at 350 degrees F. 15 minutes then remove lid. Place onion rings on top and take 10 minutes longer. Do not replace lid. Serves four.

TURKEY BONE SOUP

Bones of 1 turkey
2 quarts cold water
1 cup diced carrots
1 medium onion
One-half cup rice
One-fourth bay leaf
3 peppercorns
1 tablespoon salt
1 stalk celery

In heavy large kettle, place turkey bones, water, bay leaf, peppercorns and one-half teaspoon salt. Bring to a boil in covered kettle. Reduce to simmering and simmer 2 hours. Cool.

Take meat from bones and discard bones. Strain remaining liquid. Add enough water.

The Lord is my Shepherd

I shall not want

He maketh me to lie down in green pastures

He restoreth my soul

He leadeth me in the path of righteousness for his name sake

Yea though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death

I will fear no evil

For thou art with me, thy rod and thy staff
they comfort me

before me in the presence of mine
enemies

Thou anointest my head with oil

My cup runneth over

Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life and I will dwell in the House of the Lord

Trouble floors USAF fighters

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. Air Force says almost 100 of its most advanced fighter planes will be grounded by next summer due to persistent problems with their engines.

The F-100 engine in F-15 and F-16 fighters has been plagued for several years with problems such as stalling in flight, turbine failures and the need for more maintenance than was expected, the U.S. Air Force has disclosed.

The situation has reached the point "where it appears to have a potentially serious impact on the readiness of the air force fighter aircraft," said Senator Howard Cannon (Dem. Nev.), who presided over a Senate armed services committee hearing on the engine Tuesday.

Correction of those deficiencies will cost more than $1.1 billion, Cannon said. The Pentagon has spent $4.4 billion to develop and purchase 1,708 of the engines and eventually will spend $15 billion to buy and operate more than 3,500 F-100s in its aircraft.

Since 1975, engines in the F-15 have stalled on 755 occasions and sometimes "the only way to recover is to shut the engine down and restart it," said Gen. Alton Slay, head of the U.S. Air Force Systems Command. That problem has never occurred with the F-16, he added.

Slay said the stall problem has been solved through changes in new and existing engines and that problems with turbine failures had also been eliminated.

But he acknowledged durability problems have lowered the plane's readiness and increased the need for spare engines and parts. "We clearly underestimated our logistic support requirements for the F-100 engine," he said.

Several European countries have agreed to purchase the F-16 and the plane is one of the types of fighters being considered by the Canadian government.

Observe before culling

gardening
hilda beastall

No longer are gardens laid out with the thought of their appearance in a hundred years time. Even here on Vancouver Island the rapid pace of environmental change is apparent. Around us we see farmlands disappear and treed areas give way to multiple-lane highways.

These are inevitable changes as more people come from other places to enjoy what we have taken for granted as being permanent benefits. But population pressure surely means change.

There are still homes being built; still gardens to be laid out by enjoyable, though pehaps inexperienced, new owners. Each will have some idea of the use to be made of the home garden. It is likely that food production will be high on the list with the idea of dehydration of much that is produced, and freezing of some, as well as increased use of the garden fresh fruits and vegetables in the long period of growing here on the south end of the Island.

Couple with all this home garden activity will be the need for an outdoor shaded and protected area for relaxing. There may be no longer the desire to get away on weekends and holidays, spending energy and scarce cash to go to distant places. The home base will have more appeal since it will reflect the owners' personal interests.

This is where the first look at one's home lot should be made to assess its best use.

An open space free from dense shade is a necessity for growing vegetables which are sown each year, but the moving shadows from a leafy tree or two can be beneficial. Trees of a denser kind on the north or northeast are likely to give protection to the home and the garden area in winter.

Native growth already existing on the property should be lived with for at least a year before cutting out either trees or underbrush. These assets might well be the ready-made nucleus of the relaxation area. No waiting for young sapling trees to provide shade or visual enjoyment; no need to build an expensive patio, for the ground will probably be almost bare except for a bit of underbrush quite suited for background. Perhaps a little thinning is all that is needed.

During the year of observing the effect of native growth already on the property, the open sunny vegetable area can have its soil improved and be producing the first crops.

Improvers are seaweed from open beaches, old cow manure (this is now in classified advertising) and simply by growing an assortment of vegetables, then turning in the non-edible parts.

At the same time a picture will be forming as to what material will be most desirable for additional planting.

Let us suppose as an alternative that the lot is an empty rectangle with patches of weedy grass and clay. And let us suppose that a semi-native picture appeals to you.

A clump of three white birches (more readily available in small sizes from nurseries than is an Arbutus), an Oregon-grape or two, scarlet-flowered currant (Ribes sanguineum) to flower in early spring — these make a beginning.

Native Dogwood (Cornus nuttallii) can be added later from nursery-grown stock, to make another shade tree, but remember to first mark out on the ground the area of its branching influence at near maturity.

Within that area can be planted whatever shrubs and other plants may be liked on a more or less temporary basis. Some may be moved later to other parts of the garden, some of less value may be considered as temporary fillers to be discarded if no other place is suitable or available.

Gardening in this way has its appeal to young people since it is more creative than starting with a landscaped garden.

Gardens of the future will need to satisfy all our senses and all our needs, that is why the making of them today requires creative thought.

Atlin 'hot' water woes have Passarell fuming

Atlin NDP MLA Al Passarell says he is not satisfied with the health ministry's assurance that concentrations of uranium and radium found in Atlin's water supply do not reach the government's proposed maximum acceptable levels.

However, Wayne Greene, director of the ministry's radiation protection service, said Tuesday the high levels of concentration are found only in some streams which flow out of the mountains. The water is diluted by water from numerous pure streams when they flow together into Surprise Lake, he said.

"There were some reports of high values, but these were not drinking water," Greene said.

Studies of well water, he said, have found up to 3.1 parts per billion of uranium and .07 becquerels per litre of radium, which is about average for drinking water in B.C. The proposed standards for drinking water are 20 parts per billion for uranium and 1.0 becquerels per litre for radium.

Passarell said he thinks the concentrations of radioactive materials in the drinking water may be connected to two recent mongoloid births in the area and to the disappearance of bottom-feeding fish from Surprise Lake.

He said any level of uranium is too high and the government should forget about continued testing.

"What I want is some action on the part of the department of health and the environment ministry to clear up the source of the contamination," he said.

Sea search called off

The U.S. Coast Guard called off a search Tuesday after rescue airplanes flew over a stormy Pacific Ocean 675 kilometres off the Oregon Coast looking for the source of an emergency radio signal.

American and Canadian rescue planes were unable to spot any ships or establish communications with any distressed vessels in the area, Coast Guard spokesman Jim Gilman said.

"We determined it apparently was a false alarm;" he said after the search was called off at 2:30 p.m. PST.

D'Estaing denies gift valued at $250,000

PARIS (Reuter) — President Valery Giscard d'Estaing on Tuesday night denied reports that he accepted diamonds worth about $250,000 from former Central African emperor Jean-Bedel Bokassa but did not deny that he received some gems from the deposed monarch.

The president was replying for the first time to allegations made by the French weekly Le Canard Enchaine that he had received diamonds worth one million francs while he was finance minister.

His denial appeared to be limited to the worth of the diamonds and not to the actual gift.

"As for reports concerning the value of what I received as finance minister, I issue a formal and, I add, contemptuous denial," Giscard d'Estaing said in a television interview.

The president, saying he found it "disagreeable to reply to questions of such a nature," said he had turned many gifts over to charity or museums.

After Bokassa was toppled in a coup, Le Canard Enchaine published charges Oct. 10 that Giscard d'Estaing had received diamonds worth one million francs.

A week later, the president's spokesman said Giscard d'Estaing would reply "in due course." During the interview on national television Tuesday night, one interviewer asked the president whether "the moment has come."

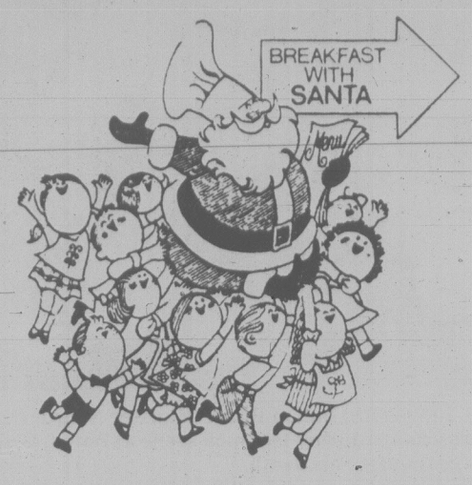

In reply, the president recalled that he had promised when he was elected in 1974 that he would never take legal action against any newspaper for stories on his activities.

CONTROVERSY LINGERS: Indian Prime Minister Nehru, shown here being grabbed by security guard during 1962 mob scene at Patna, is again the centre of controvery 15 years after his death.

Nehru haunts India politics

Critics argue his industrial revolution failed

By WAJMUL HASAN

NEW DELHI (Reuter) — Fifteen years after his death, Jawaharlal Nehru, India's first prime minister, is the centre of political controversy.

No other prime minister except Indira Gandhi, Nehru's daughter, who ruled the country for 11 years until 1977, has figured more prominently in national debate.

The controversy has acquired a sharper edge recently as political parties try to work out solutions for India's economic problems before next January's national election.

Nehru, who governed for 17 years, gave India a mixed economy and enormous manufacturing plants to spur the country toward an industrial revolution.

His critics now say the revolution failed.

The debate symbolizes the continuing Indian dilemma about how to feed, clothe and house 650 million people, half of them living below the poverty level.

Should industry get preference over agriculture? The towns over villages?

One man who thinks they should not is the present prime minister, Charan Singh. The 76-year-old Singh, once described by Nehru as a "son of the 18th century," has emerged as the late prime minister's severest critic.

"Nehru's strategy of building heavy industry ruined the economy," says Singh, a disciple of the late Mohandas K. Gandhi.

He adds that Nehru gave "stepmotherly treatment" to agriculture and to the small and cottage industries favored by Gandhi, the revered father of India's independence from Britain.

As a result, "poverty has increased and even in the towns more than 40 per cent of the people have little food, less clothing and no shelter," Singh says.

"Are we going to reverse this or are we going to be content with gorifying a great man's name?"

Singh's statements have raised an outcry.

"He wants to take India back to the cow-dung age," counters C.M. Stephen, one of Indira Gandhi's chief lieutenants.

Opposition Leader Jagjivan Ram, who served under Nehru, remarks: "To say nothing has happened in the last 32 years is to shatter the confidence of the country Nehru built."

Ram says Nehru laid the infrastructure for heavy industry that helped the country develop. Singh contends that overdependence on heavy industry has resulted in unemployment for one-third of the active population in rural areas.

The Indian Express describes the controversy as "palpably bogus," adding: "India made significant progress during his (Nehru's) stewardship of the government. The progress slowed down subsequently."

Singh's criticism of Nehru nearly wrecked his Lok Dal Party's alliance with Mrs. Gandhi's Congress party, a partner in his coalition government.

Congress members, fiercely loyal to Nehru, their former leader, are irked by the prime minister's criticisms which they view as an attack on their own beliefs.

The dispute held up a joint election manifesto by the two parties. Finally, both agreed to avoid any references to Nehru. They also decided in favor of setting up more small and cottage industries without reducing the role of heavy industry.

"Both Gandhi and Nehru are part of India's legacy," says P.N. Haksar, former deputy chairman of the planning commission. "If we reject both, we will be left only with Marx."

But Singh remains determined to give India's 600,000 villages a better deal.

"I do not want to be unjust to the towns but to undo the injustice to the villages," he told an election rally.

Singh, who draws his main support from small farmers, says the battle cry in the election should be that "the poor shall prevail over the rich . . . the villages over the despotism of urban lobbies."

Ex-king vindicated by Sikkim election

By BARRY SHLACHTER

GANGTOK, Sikkim (AP) — On a hill above this Himalayan capital stands a 19th-century palace where the royal flag of Sikkim is flown defiantly by the former "chogyal" (king), now an ordinary Indian citizen officially known as Mr. P.T. Namgyal.

Sikkim and its 200,000 subjects were taken over by India in 1975. The years since have not been kind to Namgyal. A string of tragedies has led some, including his sister, to conclude there is a curse on the royal house.

"This man has been through so much," says a former aide. First his American wife, Hope Cooke, left him, then he lost his kingdom, survived a suicide attempt the following year and finally lost his eldest son in an auto crash.

But now the silver-haired, 56-year-old Namgyal says things are looking up.

Sikkim has held its election as an Indian state. The Sikkimese people deprived the incumbent, pro-Indian leadership of every one of its State Assembly seats and voted into power a party which had staunchly opposed the Indian takeover.

'Sikkim was wrongly annexed'

"I think the election outcome vindicates my stand that Sikkim was wrongly annexed," says the deposed king. "I hope the new (state) government will give us back our self-identity and that India rights the wrong done to us."

As first measures, the victorious Sikkim Janata Parishad party gave new responsibility to bureaucrats who had been in disfavor for alleged pro-monarchy leanings. It made it clear that officials lent from other Indian states would be reduced in number.

There is little likelihood that the party will openly press for changing Sikkim's status within the Indian union, although it maintains that the 1975 referendum, held on 72 hours' notice, was rigged.

It considers the annexation a disagreeable, but accomplished fact, a party leader says.

Well-connected Sikkimese feel that the king, target of numerous protests, risked losing power even if the referendum had been conducted normally. But the question of merger with India, lumped together with ending the monarchy, would have had a tough time passing.

Poll defended by Gandhi

Indira Gandhi, then India's prime minister, asserted that the poll, with 96 per cent supporting the question, was held democratically.

However, Gangtok officials conceded that many Sikkimese were probably intimidated by the presence of rifle-toting Indian police in polling stations. The king was under house arrest, unable to campaign or vote.

Resentment against "carpetbaggers" from India's plains states was seen as a major factor in the election outcome Oct. 12. After annexation, Indians swarmed into Gangtok, tripling its population to 50,000.

Their sudden entry transformed the once-quaint capital into a slum, long-time residents complained.

"I want to stop the influx of outsiders as soon as possible," the newly elected chief minister, N.B. Bhandari, says. "They will not get jobs here. After all, the people of Sikkim are politically and economically backward and I must stop outsiders from exploiting them."

Many Indians, who run nearly all of the shops along Gangtok's Old Bazaar Street (now called Mahatma Gandhi Road,) began to feel insecure followng the election.

Says he was beaten by youths

Dr. Bhaskaran Behara, a physician admittedly working for the central government's intelligence bureau, says he was beaten 11 days after the balloting by Sikkimese youths who called him an Indian dog.

Chief Minister Bhandari, 39, an ex-schoolteacher, made a public appeal for restraint and denied that the assailants were his party members.

He also announced that state officials would be allowed to attend the Dec. 2 wedding of the ex-king's daughter to a New York advertising executive, Simon Abrahams, effectively ending a ban imposed by the defeated government that kept citizens from meeting the fallen monarch.

But restirctions placed by India on the former ruler remain in force.

"I still have to inform the (Indian-appointed) governor before I move out of Gangtok," Namgyal says. Most of his assets, whose value he "conservatively" placed at $125 million, have been frozen by the Indian government which pays him a monthly living allowance against the final settlement.

Former king admits mistakes

The ex-king admits he made mistakes a decade ago in "pressing too hard" for the easing of Sikkim's protectorate status under India.

However, he is proud that before annexation, Sikkim had a higher annual per capital income, $110, than that of any Indian state. During his reign he introduced adult franchise and got the Nepalese majority "to think Sikkimese."

Namgyal, a former Buddhist monk who became crown prince when his eldest brother was killed in an air crash, says he has some hope that the Sikkimese people can maintain their identity but little for his own return to power.

Crime wave sweeping China

PEKING (Reuter) — A crime wave is sweeping through the major cities of China.

Authorities, especially in the huge, sprawling city of Shanghai on the east coast, are particularly worried about the trend, as it centres on the increasing criminal tendencies of young people.

The situation has become serious only in the last few months, and the official press, which usually does not dwell at length on the negative aspect of Chinese society, has published a constant stream of stories about robberies, gang fights, rapes and general trouble-making.

The problem has become so serious in Shanghai, says the city's Liberation Daily, that many young women now are afraid to attend evening school for fear of being attacked.

Young men, usually operating in pairs, are reported to prowl darkened alleyways of Peking threatening passers-by with knives and demanding money, wristwatches and other valuables.

In the city of Hangzhou, twin sons of an unidentified top-level official were sentenced to death recently for their part in the rape of 106 girls over a five-year period.

Shanghai's biggest department store has organized a group of detectives to stop the increasing rate of shoplifting, and in the port city of Tianjin there have been official reports of gangs fighting in the streets with guns, axes and bayonets.

Aside from violent crime, corruption cases are also on the increase. One woman was sentenced to death recently for organizing a corruption syndicate in a northern province.

The most obvious reasons for the rise in crime are the huge unemployment figures that exist in China and the revision during the last year of the government's "down to the country" program which has resulted in fewer surplus young people going to rural areas to relieve pressure on the cities.

Some estimates put the number of unemployed in China at 20 million, and with nothing to do and no source of income — there are no unemployment benefits here — many young people turn to crime out of necessity or sheer frustration.

But most people seem to agree that the root cause of the crime problem, as with most problems in China today, is the Cultural Revolution of the late 1960s, which ripped apart the social fabric and upset law and order to such an extent that the country still has not recovered.

The Red Guards, often with the active encouragement of persons in authority, indulged in looting and destruction, beating and humiliating people they considered to be "counter-revolutionary," and generally behaving as they pleased with no control from any law enforcement agency.

Guerrilla cub ready to die

BEIRUT (AP) — Muayed Kilani is a 16-year-old Palestinian "guerrilla cub" who wants to die for a country he has never seen.

"My father met his martyrdom for the sake of Palestine and, Allah willing, I shall die for the same cause," the lean, wiry schoolboy said during a break in combat training at the Palestine Liberation Organization's Chatilla camp here.

With sweat pouring from his face, Kilani spoke with determination of the mission of the "cubs," aged 14 to 19, who will graduate and join one of eight guerrilla groups that make up the PLO. They average four hours of training a day.

"We are the sons of the Palestinian revolution, and we want to die revolutionaries," he said. "Our mothers fed us the love of Palestine with the milk of their breasts. The Palestine of our dreams is indeed more sacred to us than the reality of Palestine was to our fathers."

Trainer Abu Khaled roared a command, and the youngsters jumped and cried out in unison, "Revolution until victory!"

"A drop of sweat in training saves a drop of blood in combat," Abu Khaled reminded them. "Let your triumphant cry ring in enemy ears like a tocsin of bloodletting and utter death."

"Some of us cursed our fathers because they failed to fight, but our sons will not curse us," said Kilani, brandishing his rifle and patting its butt.

His guerrilla father was killed in southern Lebanon two years ago, leaving a widow and three boys to "refuel the revolution" against Israel, he said.

"My mother has always been proud of my father's martyrdom, and we never felt like orphans," he said. "The Palestinian revolution is our eternal father."

Kilani, his mother and two brothers have since been living on the dole, a meagre 300 Lebanese pounds — $93 — a month, from Yasser Arafat's PLO.

Kilani said "there's nothing illusory about us wanting to die." He said his leaders have taught him, and others, that "every martyr kindles a new torch for the revolution."

Nodding sadly, he admitted that "death to us is a far happier thing than our sad reality."

U.S. Steel lays off 13,000

PITTSBURGH (Reuter) — United States Steel Corp. says it plans to close operations at more than a dozen sites, causing about 13,000 people to lose their jobs.

U.S. Steel, the largest steel maker in the United States, said on Tuesday that operations in eight states would be affected. It indicated that the cost would exceed $268 million, wiping out all of its profits for the year.

The closures, affecting a wide variety of steel products, were blamed on rising costs, competition from imports and environmental regulations.

A U.S. Steel spokesman said the decision, made by the board of directors of the company, was the most wide-ranging in the modern history of the firm, which was founded in the 19th century.

Thousands of workers have been laid off in the industry, which began to feel the effects of an economic slowdown in the third quarter.

Especially damaging have been slumps in the auto and appliance industries, two of the biggest customers of the steel industry.

A U.S. Steel spokesman said no timetable for the closings had been set, but the company statement said that some of the facilities would operate into 1980 to fulfil commitments to customers.

U.S. Steel said the closures would cause it to have a loss in the fourth quarter and for 1979 as a whole. For the first nine months of this year, the profits of the company were more than $268 million.

The 13,000 employees who will lose their jobs — managers and administrators as well as hourly workers — represent around 6.5 per cent of the work force of the company.

U.S. Steel said it was cold hard economics, but the news of another mill shutdown was a blow to the heart of beleaguered Youngstown.

"We feel clobbered" said Bob Vasquez, union leader of the 3,500 workers who will lose their jobs when the company's Ohio and McDonald Works are phased out.

Tax treats total 8.9%

OTTAWA (CP) — Personal exemptions, tax brackets and the refundable child tax credit will go up by 8.9 per cent for the 1980 tax year.

Finance Minister John Crosbie tabled the tax indexation details in the Commons Tuesday, saying that while the information was to have been in his Dec. 11 budget, he had decided to do it earlier to give employers time to make the necessary adjustments to the 1980 payroll deduction schedules.

The 8.9-per-cent increase will benefit federal taxpayers by $1.425 billion in 1980, with the basic personal exemption going up by $240 to reach $2,890 and the married exemption increasing by $210 to $2,530.

The exemption for dependants under age 18 goes to $540 from $500, the exemption for those age 18 or more, to $990 from $910 and the age exemption, to $1,810 from $1,660 as does the deduction for the blind and disabled.

The child tax credit for the 1980 taxation year, which will be claimed in 1981, will rise to $238 from $218 for each child.

Crosbie's pre-budget goodies were disclosed along with hints that his Dec. 11 budget will try to stimulate the economy by encouraging expansion of Canadian industries, especially those that manufacture internationally-traded goods.

However, Crosbie warned that many Canadians will have to tighten their belts while the Progressive Conservative government wrestles with inflation.

The coming budget will have few, if any, tax cuts, Crosbie said, adding that its policies will not be popular.

"It will begin a process that involves several years of stringent fiscal and monetary discipline.

The main stumbling block facing the Tory budget has been the dispute with Alberta over a new energy pricing policy.

Tuesday, however, Prime Minister Clark emerged from nearly eight hours of private talks with Alberta Premier Peter Lougheed saying he was confident a new oil pricing agreement with the provinces is at hand.

Shah leaves for Mexico within 10 days — aide

Times News Services

The shah is expected to return to his Cuernavaca, Mexico, retreat within 10 days, a member of his public relations office said today.

"It all depends on when his medical treatment ends but we believe he will be here in eight to ten days," the spokesman said in Mexico.

But in New York, Iran filed a civil lawsuit today against the shah and his wife, seeking $20 billion it claims he diverted through a New York-based foundation.

The suit, filed in state Supreme Court, also seeks compensatory damages of $61 billion.

"The shah misappropriated, embezzled or otherwise diverted to his own use, assets and funds having an approximate value of $20 billion," the suit charges.

It says the conduit of diversion was the Pahlavi Foundation, which was formed in Iran in 1958, "ostensibly as a non-profit, charitable organization."

(President Carter will hold a nationally televised news conference at 6 p.m. PDT tonight to report on the Iranian situation.)

Meanwhile, in the United Nations, the UN Security Council has delayed the start of its debate on the U.S.-Iranian crisis until Saturday night, waiting for the arrival from Tehran of Iran's acting foreign minister, Abolhassan Bani Sadr. (Just before noon word was received that Ayatollah Khomeini today replaced Bani Sadr, a moderate, with Revolutionary Council member Sadegh Ghotbzadeh.)

An Iranian spokesman in Tehran said today that Bani Sadr or his successor "probably" will not attend the council session. Ayatollah Khomeini, who has rejected in advance any council decision, summoned Bani Sadr and other members of the Revolutionary Council to consider strategy.

The 15-member council launched its public consideration of the crisis with a 16-minute session Tuesday afternoon at which it heard speeches by Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim and Council President Sergio Palacios de Vizzio of Bolivia. It then adjourned until 9 p.m. EST Saturday.

Waldheim called on the United States and Iran "to avoid any action which could inflame" the situation further. Palacios de Vizzio urged Iran to release the 49 Americans held hostage in the U.S. embassy in Tehran, renewing an appeal he made on behalf of the council on Nov. 9.

Iran's UN Mission had said Bani Sadr would be in New York for the start of the debate Saturday night.

S. Pole air crash kills 257

A U.S. rescue helicopter crew reported it saw no signs of survivors today in the wreckage of an Air New Zealand DC-10 that crashed in the frozen Antarctic with 257 people aboard, including one Canadian and 12 Americans.

New Zealand's Search and Rescue Headquarters said the helicopter carrying the rescue team was unable to land because of strong wind currents over the crash site.

A Canadian passenger aboard the the downed jetliner was identified as Eija Parkkari, 25, of Toronto. Miss Parkkari's mother, Kyllikki Parkkari, of Thunder Bay, Ont., said her daughter was on a working trip with a travel agency.

The search plane from the U.S. Antarctic base at McMurdo sighted the wreckage on the icy slopes of Mount Erebus, a 3,500-metre mountain near the plane's last reported position.

The pilot of the search plane said the wreckage was about 760 metres up the side of the mountain, with major pieces of the plane scattered over a 200-metre area.

Officials said the crash was New Zealand's worst air accident ever and by far the country's worst disaster

Charges eyed over slides

Times News Services

Federal Fisheries Minister Jim McGrath said Tuesday he is seeking legal advice on whether to lay charges against a British Columbia timber company for mudslides that have damaged a major salmon spawning stream on the Queen Charlotte Islands.

Last March, federal fisheries officials arrested 16 loggers for cutting in the area, thereby endangering a fish habitat which is protected under the Fisheries Act. The charges were dropped after a federal-provincial squabble over jurisdiction.

McGrath said that after touring the area last September he wanted to go ahead with charges against the company then, but lawyers said it would be hard to make a case.

He said he has asked the lawyers to have another look at the case in light of the damage to the stream.

Jim Fulton, the New Democratic MP whose Skeena riding includes the Queen Charlotte Islands, said in an interview that he wants McGrath to enforce the Fisheries Act.

"It's not just a question of fish versus the trees. It boils down to a constitutional question that involves the long-term resource management."

He said residents of the area say the rainfall which provincial officials are blaming for the slides is common in the area. The company's logging practices were the real cause.

Former fisheries minister Romeo LeBlanc, who agreed to drop the charges against the loggers after the B.C. government said the stream would be protected, said the provincial government "has betrayed us."

The incident is especially aggravating to federal officials who are spending $25 million a year in B.C. trying to improve streams and rivers as part of a salmon enhancement program.

Meanwhile, the provincial environment ministry has sent two people to the Rennell Sound area of the Queen Charlotte Islands to check reports that further slides threaten the stream, Environment Minister Steve Rogers said.

City's crime rate dropping

The number of serious crimes reported in Victoria has dropped eight per cent this year, city police said today.

Chief Jack Gregory presented statistics for January through October which show a total of 8,959 criminal code offences up to Halloween, compared with 9,777 to Oct. 31 last year.

Most categories of crime show a decline. Theft under $200 accounted for 3,292 incidents so far this year, compared with 3,467 in the same 10 month period last year.

Breaking and entering statistics were 1,590 this year versus 1,737 last year while assaults totalled 473 in 1979 and 532 in 1978.

Food price continues to climb

OTTAWA (CP) — Higher prices for fish, beverages and fresh vegetables helped push food prices up slightly between October and November, the agriculture department said today.

The department's monthly food-at-home index rose by 0.47 per cent and stands 13.1 per cent higher than in November, 1978. The cost of a nutritious diet for a family of four for a week stands at $61.44, up 34 cents from October.

Fish prices rose 3.6 per cent during November "reflecting strong demand and higher costs of fishing, processing and distribution."

Higher prices for coffee and soft drinks pushed up the beverage index by 1.5 per cent in a month. Fresh vegetable prices rose by 5.5 per cent because of higher price for imported tomatoes and cabbages. Prices for imported fresh produce are expected to rise sharply in the next few months.

But prices for beef, pork and fresh and processed fruit were lower than in October.

Milk prices rose in several centres and higher energy and labor costs pushed up prices for cereal and bakery products by one per cent. Prices are expected to remain high until next summer.

Province urged to buy Carr collection

Victoria Ald. Robin Blencoe today appealed to the provincial government to spend $1.3 million in lottery funds to bring a large collection of Emily Carr paintings to Victoria.

The 27 paintings in the Fannin Hall Collection represent the biggest single sale of Carr's art in recent years.

An anonymous Vancouver industrialist is selling the collection, believed the largest privately-owned group of Carr's paintings.

In a letter to Provincial Secretary Evan Wolfe, Blencoe said he believes lottery funds are the best source of money to buy the collection because the money is specifically earmarked for cultural, artistic and athletic projects.

"Emily Carr is a painter of great historical importance to B.C. and Victoria," Blencoe said.

"It is quite fitting and appropriate that this superb collection be repatriated to the city where Emily was born."

Blencoe said the chance to purchase the collection represents a "once-in-a-lifetime" opportunity to acquire a fine collection of Carr's works.

Blencoe's proposal was hailed by Roger Boulet, director of the Art Gallery of Greater Victoria.

"Fantastic," he said. "That's what lottery funds are for."

Boulet said there are some of Carr's later paintings in the collection he would like to acquire but said there is no chance of this happening due to a lack of funds.

The Victoria gallery has eight Carrs in its permanent collection, some of the calibre of the Fannin Hall paintings, Boulet said.

Karen Keenlyside, the former curator of the collection who is handling the sale, said the paintings cover the breadth of the late artist's work and include five unique early paintings from 1910-11 when Carr worked in France.

The present owner cannot be identified because of concern for the security of the collection, she said.

By chance the collection's arrival on the market coincides with recent publication of a book on Carr's art by local author Doris Shadbolt.

Keenlyside said it was Shadbolt's book that moved her to try to keep the collection intact by selling all 27 paintings to one collector or corporation.

Shadbolt said the Fannin Hall Collection is part of B.C.'s heritage and should remain in the province.

Lorna Farrell-Ward, a curator at the Vancouver Art Gallery, said there is virtually no chance the gallery will be able to purchase the collection because of its "pitifully small" acquisition budget.

"We would love someone to purchase them and donate them to us," said Farrell-Ward. "That would not only keep them here but add to our collection and fill in some areas."

The Vancouver gallery's 173 paintings form the largest single collection of Carr's work, but it has no paintings from her French period. The National Art Gallery in Ottawa has one of those paintings.

Because of their importance as Canadian art, the Carr paintings fall under export controls that prevent them from being sold outside the country.

A spokesman at the National Gallery said it cannot afford the full collection either.

"We're always interested in buying more Carrs, but we don't have the money to put into that area at this time," said Charles Hill, curator of post-Confederation Canadian art.

"There are very few institutions that would have that kind of money."

Allan Anderson has just had his fourth book published and when he talks about it you wonder how he ever got the job finished.

In an interview he rattled on like a machine gun about the 100-plus nautical characters whose tales he taped for his book Salt Water, Fresh Water.

He talked — almost non-stop — about fishermen, divers, whalers, tugboat skippers and others he'd met during the five months he roamed Canada with his tape recorder, savoring the marrow of men who go down to the sea.

Among the vignettes in Anderson's book is one on Capt. Frank Gavin of the Pacific Rescue Co-ordination Centre. Gavin tells of the time search and rescue specialists jumped into the ocean from a Buffalo aircraft, armed with knives in their teeth for protection against sharks.

They had been assigned to rescue two fishermen who had been in their sunken troller's liferaft for three days, and the rescuers wanted a fighting chance if they came face to face with jaws.

By PAT DUFOUR

Anderson also recalled his interview with Capt. Mark Goostrey and Douglas Johnston shortly before the flight of their Airwest twin-engined Otter that plummeted into Vancouver harbor in September last year, killing them and nine of their Japanese passengers.

They had discussed casually what it's like to "ferry" passengers across water day in and day out. He said he could hardly believe hours later that they were dead.

How did Anderson get started on the book? It's quite simple. He says he is a gregarious Canadian driven by an urge to share his love of modern Canadiana.

He was raised in Calgary and now lives on a hilltop in Tottenham, Ont., on 4½ acres and a farmhouse that he bought for $6,000 in 1949.

He swears he can see Saskatoon from his hilltop.

He's been a freelancer all his life. He studied journalism in Montreal and remembers Stephen Leacock as one of his most inspiring mentors. He says he would never be a newspaper reporter because he isn't prepared to get up at 7 a.m. and put in regular hours.

Instead, he stayed with his freelance writing and broadcasting for the CBC for 30 years. He did an hour-long show on Victoria 10 years ago.

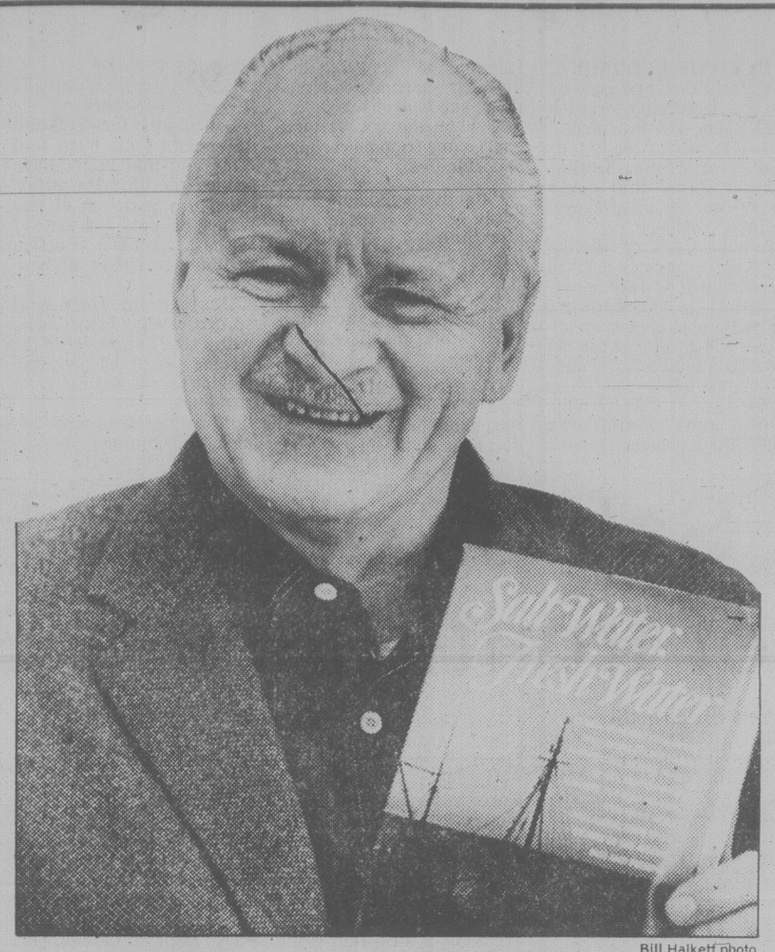

Four years ago, when he was 60, he decided to write his first book Remembering the Farm.

Having met so many people who make their living from the soil, Anderson says he felt impelled to catch the spirit of men who make the sea their business.

His father was a maritimer, born in Chatham, N.B., and the landlocked Anderson has never forgotten the salty tales told him by his father.

Now, those tales have been brought up to date by those he writes about in his book. And, while he is fascinated by the lusty lives of mariners, he is candid when asked if he yearns to become waterborne.

"Like the fishermen, I respect the seas," he says, "But to face some of the things they do — I'd be scared . . . witless."

max low

When you extend your neck across the chopping block of life you can expect that someone will gladly take a swing.

I didn't have to wait long after my column on the Iran situation appeared last Wednesday before a woman with an unmistakably American voice phoned.

Giving her name simply as Mrs. Ritchie, the woman said she had lived here 11 years (after moving from the States) and found my column "so full of hate" she couldn't believe it.

I prefer to think it was logic and an attempt at objectivity rather than hate but Mrs. Ritchie said she always dismisses such "attacks on America" as sour grapes. The people who have more money are the ones who are criticized, she explained.

"Your column is tops in pure vitriol!" Mrs. R added angrily.

It would seem I don't have the market cornered on vitriol, though, as my caller went on to lash out at Canadians. All Canadians should get rid of their insane, childish jealousy of Americans, she said.

"Canadians are so often eaten up by envy and they take it out on Americans to whom they refer as 'our neighbors to the south.'

"What's wrong with saying 'Americans?' Are they afraid of it? By saying 'our neighbors to the south' Canadians are doing something mean, petty and hateful."

And Mrs. Ritchie wound up her telephone onslaught by saying that Americans are always being criticized for their lifestyles but Canadians should definitely take a look at their own lifestyles.

With any controversial subject, of course, you hear from both sides. As well as Gorde Hunter and the other "members of Uncle Sam's family" up here, there are some who feel Canada should be able to stand on its own feet, have its own identity and put across audibly its own beliefs, instead of bleating in unison with "our neighbors to the south."

"I did so enjoy your column on the Iranian situation," reader Bette Morrison, who said she once lived in the States for more than four years, said in a letter.

"I feel Canada should not be taking sides in this situation but trying to be as objective as possible. Columns like yours certainly help."

"You touched upon the most controversial issue of our day, and I thought your points were made tellingly," wrote Robin Carlsen.

"There is an immense kind of ego involvement on the part of the Americans — and to a lesser extent ourselves — to not give in to the Iranian demands, or even to admit the support for the Shah was a dubious venture," Carlsen said. "The irrational and violent reaction in the media — the U.S. is absolutely right, the Iranian students are bloodthirsty, their leader is a lunatic — will eventually give way, as the facts become more clear, to a more balanced and more difficult response.

"There is some pride, some unquestioned assumptions the U.S. has about their policies and behavior towards the world," Carlsen went on. "In this case what riles them most is the fanatical integrity of the students, the scorn of the Ayatollah for all their political threats and manipulation.

"Somewhere the Americans need to be taught a lesson and I believe fate has really dished it out to them this time. The very indiscriminate — becoming more objective now — reporting of this event in the press and television was alarming enough: The consciousness of the U.S. just couldn't be more disturbed or crudely attacked.

"The likelihood of Iran backing down, however, is remote and what will be interesting is when America is sobered up enough to examine some different set of options than the ones they are now prepared to consider. International law is based on some idea of universal law.

"What the Shah did — even what the U.S. did to support him — may constitute a much more intrinsically violent act of crime than the taking over of the embassy."

Saying "that was a gentle and refreshing wave of wisdom that came in your column," Carlsen predicted "we'll see some surprises coming up — that Allah is indeed a little more subtle and innocent than the U.S. State Department. Not that I should like to submit to Koranic law, but I do believe the Americans are quite deceived in their moral righteousness in this matter, to their own peril."

Pierre Trudeau has said Canada should do more toward ending the stalemate in Iran. I agree.

While not going as far as saying that any blow against America is a blow against us (because we are such good buddies), I believe Canada, along with all other nations which profess to love peace, should make it known — and loudly — that we abhor this act of terrorism.

That we are concerned, not just for the safety of the 49 hostages but for all mankind, lest this be the first of many such incidents that make a mockery of worldwide diplomatic procedure and render embassies perilous places in which to work.

'Juvenile motel' escapes frustrate police: Gregory

By NORMAN GIDNEY

A juvenile serving a two-year sentence at the Juvenile Detention Home for attempted murder has escaped twice from the Pembroke Street facility, Chief Jack Gregory said today.

He told the police board that on the night of Oct. 22 there were several escapes from the supposedly secure building and four incidents of breaking and entering were reported in the Fernwood neighborhood.

The JDH continues to be a frustrating security problem for Victoria police despite the provincial government's recent $250,000 renovation of the building, he said.

Keeping a juvenile for a two-year sentence would seem to contravene the terms of the province's lease with the four core municipalities who own the building. It states that the JDH is to be used only as a remand centre, or for juveniles who have been to court and are awaiting assignment to some other institution.

No one is supposed to stay there longer than 30 days without the written permission of the municipalities' family court committee.

"These are the things that are frustrating to the police," said the chief.

"It's not a containment centre. It's not containing them."

It's common for the JDH staff to call the city police to ask them to remove obstreperous individuals who can't be controlled, said Gregory. This is time-consuming as police must first get a judge's permission.

GREGORY
. . . 'they break doors'

When asked how secure the home was, Gregory replied:

"They do have doors and they do have windows, but they break the doors and they break the windows."

Mayor Mike Young said no definition of the JDH's function has been established by the province.

"Is it a containment centre? Is it a remand centre or is it a place where juveniles who are in the process of readapting to society to be housed?"

If it's supposed to be a containment centre, it's not fulfilling that purpose, said Young.

Board member Janet Baird suggested the JDH is really no more than "a juvenile motel" while Young added: "It's more like a community foster tank."

The mayor told the board that Victoria is balking at selling the JDH to the provincial government because of concerns over who is to be housed there. Although the province does not yet own the building, it recently announced plans to keep 20 juveniles there, 10 beds for those awaiting remand to trial in family court and 10 for youths actually serving sentences.

Jetfoil service to follow Maggie?

The provincial government is considering a jetfoil service to replace the Princess Marguerite on the Victoria-Seattle run.

But sources close to Transportation Minister Alex Fraser say despite a meeting with a Boeing jetfoil marketing representative Tuesday, no decision has been made to go the jetfoil route.

Boeing spokesman Robin Little of Seattle said he was given a polite hearing but no definite answer.

He said if the government decides in favor of a jetfoil service, it could either run it through the B.C. Steamship Co., which operated the Marguerite, or let private enterprise do it.

Former Socred cabinet minister Sam Bawlf — who investigated the jetfoil concept while in office — said today if the government wants private enterprise to operate such a service, he would be interested in discussing it.

Bawlf said he has already held informal discussions with Boeing officials.

However, he is not actively involved in promoting the concept.

Fraser was not available for comment and neither were Tourism Minister Don Phillips or B.C. Steamship Co. general manager Arthur Elworthy.

Pilot didn't have rating on instruments: lawyer

By DEREK SIDENIUS

The pilot of a light plane that got lost in poor weather and crashed near Powell River Oct. 14 was not qualified to fly in such weather conditions, a coroner's jury was told today.

Donald Stanley Moe was rated to fly visual flight rules only, a four-man, one-woman jury was told.

Yet weather that day was such that flyers had to be experienced with instrument navigation.

Moe, 37, and two passengers, Mary Ellen Kingsfield, 34, and Valerie Lynn Wuerch, 17, all of Victoria, were killed in the mid-morning crash that occurred at the 5,400-foot elevation of an unnamed mountain 18 miles east of Powell River.

They were flying to Powell River with another plane piloted by Phil Esnouf, a Victoria architect, with three passengers.

All seven were headed for Campbell River for the inaugural service of a new Church of the Way.

The inquest is being conducted by Wilfred Carpenter, a Vancouver coroner.

In his opening remarks to the jury Brian Bastin, a Vancouver lawyer representing the coroner, said evidence given would show the two planes encountered bad weather in which an instrument rating would be required by a pilot.

But he said evidence would show Moe had no such rating.

John Addison, chief flying instructor at Victoria Flying Club, said Moe had been his student for three months between November 1977 and January 1978.

He said Moe, who had 180 hours flying time, was training to become a commercial pilot but dropped out of the program.

Moe had an average ability but in his commercial flying training was below average, he said.

Our minuses are plus

By DEREK SIDENIUS

Vancouverites find Victoria has a lot less to offer — less traffic, less hassle and less of the frenetic bustle that exists in their sprawling city.

There's another plus minus — it's less expensive for the Vancouverites who come here — about 2½ per cent less.

That's one of the findings of a trio of fourth-year University of Victoria economic students who completed a price survey of the two cities this summer.

The students, Douglas Helmcken, Clyde Moore and Shaun Wedick, compared a basket of 213 goods and services that could be purchased in both cities.

They found that for every $100 a Vancouverite spends in his city, he could stretch his dollar slightly further here, spending about $97.50 for the same items.

The greatest price differences were in housing, transportation, and a category lumping reading, recreation and education.

In their summary the students said average rents contributed most to making the Vancouver housing index (100) greater than Victoria's index (96).

Vancouver had higher insurance rates and parking fees which more than offset the higher taxi fares and gas prices in Victoria.

The reading, recreation and education component was lower in Victoria because Vancouver cablevision rates and hotel accommodation were higher.

There was hardly any difference in the four other components surveyed — food, clothing, health and personal care and tobacco and alcohol.

The survey, funded by the provincial ministry of labor and supervised by UVic economics professor Dr. Colin Jones, was carried out in July.

It was not designed to analyse price changes or relative prices over time and in that regard differed from the consumer price index or CPI, the standard measurement of living costs across the country.

The goods included in the survey, however, were based on a list of items used by Stats Canada in generating the CPI.

Ask the Times

Q. Back in the years 1925 to 1929 there were many lay preachers and religious women travelling central Alberta. They called themselves Cannanites and were very generally called Two-by-Twos because they travelled in pairs. They carried no money, food or spare clothing but went from house to house, living off the bounty of the land. Do these people still work in Alberta or other provinces of Canada? Where can I get any information on their sect? Do they have a head church or office here in Canada? L.A.P.

A. The information you need is not available locally. Your best source is the Glenbow Alberta Institute Historical Library, 9th Avenue and 1st Street S.E., Calgary, Alberta T2G 0P3.
